CLAM CHOWDER

There are various ways of making chowder from Canada's excellent canned clams but here is one that was recommended by Mrs. Evelene Spencer, who was the fish cookery expert on the staff of the Dominion Department of Fisherie and was also the author of several books on methods of preparing fish foods for the table: Boil a pint of diced potatoes in salted water; mince finely a thick slice of bacon, fry the pieces lightly, add a large onion, which has been finely minced, and cook the bacon and onion together until tender; heat a quart of milk, add to it a pint of boiling water and the strained juice from a large can of clams; having heated one-third of a cup of cooking oil, sift into it a half a cup of flour, add the cooked onion and bacon, blend the mix ture well together and add it to th boiling milk, whisking as it thic kens; then add the potato and the water in which the pieces were cooked, put in the clams, which have first been finely minced, add salt and pepper to suit the taste, and a tablespoonful of butter just igarlic with the minced bacon and onion when they are being cooked together adds to the savoriness of

Pay Section of Local Library Proving Successful

"One point of interest is the growth of the Pay Section, which has now become a workable unit in the library," said the annual report of the librarian for 1935 presented at the monthly board meeting last; night. "This section has not only increased but is self-supporting. The circulation, 915 in 1934, increase to 2,850 in 1935. Books are bought regularly each month and many of the latest books are on order even before publication. Not | only is this section a convenience to many of the borrowers but it is an asset to the main part of the library since there is a steady influx of books from this section to this combined vapor-poultice action the public shelves. The Pay Section is distinct from the other part of the library in that it is financially independent. Money given for new books is not spent on this section. "What type of books are in greatest demand? Fiction is by far the most popular, then travel. History comes next with biography a close fourth. It is interesting to note that more non-fiction books have been circulated this year than last. The library is indebted to the city for renewing the subscriptions to the magazines in the reading room. The demand for new reading material, both for pleasure and of a practical nature, is much greater than the library can at present fill. This is particularly true of the non-fiction part of the library. More new books are needed for those who wish up-to-date material on subjects of scientific and practical value.
