As Britain and Egypt Buried Hatchet With New Treaty

A scene in the Locarno room of the British foreign office at London as Mustapha Nahas Pasha, prime minister of Egypt, addresses British and Egyptian representatives just before the signing of the Anglo-Egyptian treaty on that date. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, can be seen seated at the head of the table.

Under the terms of the treaty, Great Britain retains military control over the vital Suez Canal area, but all British troops are to quit Cairo, Alexandria and other chief Egyptian cities, and are to be concentrated with the air force within the canal zone around Ismailia.
