"POOR MAN'S" PLANE TESTED IN U.S..

Clyde Pangborn, famous ocean flier, was pictured in New York in the cockpit of the "Flying Flea"-a poor man's aeroplane-before he took it off the ground for a test flight around the field. Not everything was satisfactory to the test pilot, but he succeeded in getting it off the ground and flew it at an altitude of 400 feet, and at a speed of approximately 60 miles an hour. The machine, recently received from England, is only 10 feet long, and has a wing spread of 20 feet. It has a 20 horsepower, two-cylinder engine, and the trouble that Pangborn experienced with it in the test was caused by the fact that it lacks the ailerons and elevators of larger planes. It can be made to sell for between $300 and $350.
