KING GEORGE PASSED AT MIDNIGHT

British Empire Mourns Death Of One Monarch But Rejoices At New Sovereign's Accession

Final Dramatic Scenes as George V is Gathered to His Fathers With Edward VIII Succeeding—Death Came Almost at Midnight Hour

The King is dead. Long live the King!

For the first time in more than a quarter of a century those dramatic words were on the lips of every loyal British subject last night as they sorrowed at the announcement of the passing of George V, by the Grace of God King of Great Britain, Ireland and the Dominions beyond the Seas and Emperor of India and rejoiced at the proclamation of the new King, Edward VIII.

His Majesty died last night in the twenty-sixth year of his reign. He was seventy years of age. It was officially announced that he died at 11:55 p.m. London time, (3:55 p.m. Pacific Standard Time).

The King, in a weakened condition as a result of his illness of the winter of 1928-29, succumbed to an attack of bronchial catarrh attended by cardiac weakness. The stout heart, which had withstood great strain in the previous illness, could function no longer.

The Queen and all the members of the Royal Family except the Duke of Gloucester were at Sandringham at the end.

It had been conceded earlier in the day that the King's life was ebbing away. His last illness had commenced on Friday. It was that afternoon that the public learned the monarch was confined to his room with a cold. A bulletin issued that night disclosed that he had suffered an attack of bronchial catarrh, accompanied by heart weakness. His strength slowly ebbed and his heart action slowed down. He died peacefully and without pain.

King George, it was disclosed, had been in a state of semi-coma for two days, except for brief intervals. He was able, however, to recognize the Queen yesterday and at noon in the presence of a privy council to sign a document creating a council of state to which were transferred his authorities and duties. This was his last official act. It was learned from an authoritative source that the King was unconscious just before the end came.

The King died almost at the same hour as had his father, King Edward VII, whose death in 1910 (May 6), also at Sandringham and also as a result of a cold, took place a quarter of an hour before midnight. The death occurred thirty-five years almost to a day after that of Queen Victoria who died January 22, 1901.

Last Dramatic Scenes

The final bulletin by the King's physicians said: "Death came peacefully to the King at 11:55 p.m. tonight." It was signed, "Williams, Hewitt and Dawson." The last bulletin was posted at Jubilee Gate with simplicity. Down the darkened drive from Sandringham House a bare-headed youth came riding a bicycle with a dim oil lamp flickering in front of him. In a brown leather case he brought the announcement of the King's death. Almost precisely at midnight the lowering of the flag that fluttered above Sandringham House also gave mute announcement of the end.

The Prince of Wales, who, at the age of forty-one, automatically at the instant of his father's death became sovereign of the British Empire with the title Edward VIII, was present at the bedside together with Queen Mary, the Princess Royal, the Duke of York and the Duke and Duchess of Kent. The Duke of Gloucester was ill at Buckingham Palace with a sore throat.

King George V

The dead monarch of Great Britain whose passing the whole Empire mourns.

The Royal Family had remained up throughout the long evening, knowing that the end was near. Just before midnight the doctors, realizing that death was imminent, hurriedly summoned Queen Mary, the Prince of Wales and other members of the Royal Family. Lord Dawson of Penn, with sad eyes, pronounced the King dead.

Queen Mary turned from the deathbed to her eldest son for support and, after the new King had left her, she went to her bedroom. She was weeping and the Princess Royal, Countess of Harewood, and the Duchess of Kent comforted her.

The Final Tributes

The body was removed to Sandringham Church today. It will be taken Thursday to London to lie in state in Westminster Hall where the populace will have an opportunity to pay final tribute. The funeral will take place next Tuesday with a service at St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle.

Orders were issued for the army and navy to go into mourning. Saluting stations throughout the Empire fired minute guns at noon today for each of the seventy years of the King's life. All British ships observed the salute.

In London Parliament is summoned by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin to meet today. The House of Commons will pass a formal resolution of condolence and then adjourn.

From all parts of the world messages of condolences are pouring into the capital of the Empire. President Franklin D. Roosevelt was among the first to be heard from. His message was to the new King. He expressed the deep sorrow and profound sympathy of himself and

ITALIANS ADVANCE

Claim to Have Gone Ahead 145 Miles, Killing 11,000 Ethiopians—Postpone Embargo Meet

ROME, Jan. 21.—Italy is continuing its relentless offensive in Southern Ethiopia, it is announced here. Since January 12 it is claimed that 11,000 Ethiopians have been slain in action. An advance of nearly 145 miles from Dolo is claimed during the last few days by the Italians. The defenders, it is said, are falling helplessly before the invaders, surrendering and begging for food and water.

Premier Benito Mussolini, after the committee of the League of Nations had decided yesterday not to make an immediate investigation of aerial attacks upon hospitals in Ethiopia, gave assurance that the utmost would henceforth be done to prevent further hospital bombings.

POSTPONE SESSION

GENEVA, Jan. 21.—A meeting of the League of Nations scheduled for tomorrow to consider the imposition of an oil embargo against Italy will probably be postponed owing to the death of King George of England. It is expected Rt. Hon. Anthony Eden, British Foreign Secretary, will leave for London today.

Weakness In Stock Market

Practically All Issues Recorded Small Losses In Yesterday's Trading At New York

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—The stock market displayed weakness yesterday with practically all issues recording slight losses. Closing averages were as follows: Industrials, 144.09, off .64; rails, 42.37, off .31; utilities, 30.57, off .36; bonds, 100.74, off .07. The day's transactions totalled 1,810,000 shares.

Liberals Will Make Effort To Secure Steamship Service To United Kingdom From Rupert

At the annual meeting of the Prince Rupert Liberal Association held last night in the Metropole Hall, the retiring president, A. J. Prudhomme in the chair, a suggestion was made by G. W. Nickerson that Prince Rupert should at this time try to secure a subsidy for steamships between Prince Rupert and United Kingdom instead of having to ship local products by way of Vancouver. This would be of very great benefit to the port of Prince Rupert.

Mr. Nickerson complimented the member, Mr. Hanson, on having secured a subsidy for boats calling here on the way to the Orient. The one boat that had so far taken advantage of the subsidy had left $2,500 in town, mostly in wages to workmen. If a number of boats were calling it was easy to see what

The New King in Different Roles

Wisdom of Letting Mountain Timber Be Cut Questioned

The wisdom of the provincial government in permitting the cutting of timber on the slopes of Mount Oldfield is coming in for discussion among local citizens. There are some who fear that the mountain might eventually be denuded of timber and thus lose much of its natural attractiveness.

The city is permitting no cutting down of trees on its property although timber already fallen may be used.

King George Was Favorite In All Classes; Reign of Twenty-Five Years Saw History Made

George V ascended the British throne as "the sailor king," he left it as "the democratic king." Unassuming to the point of shyness, devout and faithful in religion, hard-working, devoted to his children and home life, and with a reserved dignity relieved by the twinkle in his eyes, he typified the qualities which his subjects held highest. He sought a position close to the hearts of his people in a kindly and quiet way; unlike most men, he found proof of his achievement in his own lifetime. This came strongest in the deep sympathy that was world-wide during his serious illnesses of 1928 and 1929. Then huge crowds stood nightly outside Buckingham Palace and messages and prayers came from remote quarters of the globe.

"It was an encouragement beyond description," he said after his first illness, "to feel that my constant and earnest desire has been granted—the desire to gain the confidence and affection of my people." Possibly the most conscientious and hard-working monarch Great Britain ever had, the whole-heartedness with which King George V always dealt with the affairs of his people never was more clearly demonstrated than during the momentous war years. He was the actual embodiment of the national spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotic endeavor; he worked constantly to bolster the efforts of the people at home and aid the active fighting forces; and he made no distinction between classes.

The King's messages to his people during and following the war were of inestimable value and admirably conceived. An enormous amount of really hard work was put in by His Majesty during the war. Four times he visited the armies in France, including a visit to the Canadian army in 1916; three times he went to see the Grand Fleet "somewhere in the misty north." The King was under fire in France; he went to sea in a submerged submarine and he would have liked to go up in the air but his advisers would not permit. He visited innumerable military hospitals and held inspections at scores of military camps. He toured the most congested industrial districts of the kingdom and visited all manner of munition works, and factories, etc.

Banned Liquor

One noteworthy direction taken by the King in his war activities was the announcement in 1915 that alcoholic liquors would not be served in Buckingham Palace for the duration of the war. As a matter of fact it is believed this did not unduly disturb His Majesty, for he led a very healthy life and the pleasures of the table never had any great appeal for him. Another outstanding action was the donation from the Privy Purse to the exchequer of $500,000 in relief of war expenditure. Numerous solemn ceremonies and services were attended by His Majesty during the war, including the funeral services for Lords Roberts and Kitchener. On July 17, 1917, it was announced that all German titles had been abandoned by the King and his family and the name of the royal house was changed to the house of Windsor from Saxecoburg-Gotha.

PERIOD OF MOURNING

British Court Will Not Assemble For Nine Months; New King Flies to London

LONDON, Jan. 21: (CP)—Edward VIII flew here today from Sandringham, being the first British monarch to use a plane. Of course, the new King is known to be a seasoned flier, being himself a qualified pilot.

The first public command of the new monarch was issued after his arrival, calling upon the court to observe nine months of mourning for his father.

King Edward then met the privy council which had earlier drawn up a proclamation declaring the Prince of Wales the new sovereign. The formal oath of allegiance was given by the council to the new ruler.
