Hartford is Hard Hit as Connecticut River Goes On Rampage—Water Four Feet Deep in Business Streets and Suburbs Are Evacuated

NEW YORK, March 20.—With between 140 and 175 estimated to be dead up to last night as a result of flood conditions in fourteen eastern states, principally Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, the centre of high water distress and destruction shifted from Pittsburgh, where the Monongahela and Susquehanna Rivers were rapidly receding, to Hartford, Conn., where the Connecticut River was on the rampage, plunging the city into complete darkness, driving thousands of people from their homes and wreaking death, destruction and intense suffering. An early estimate placed the death toll in New England at thirty with millions of dollars damage and thousands of people in danger.

Man's Lips Sewn Up and He is Lashed to Cross—Unable To Explain Why

SITUATION EASING UP

Nothing Expected to Happen Following Condemnation of Germany

LONDON, March 20.—With the tenseness of the European situation considerably diminished, leading statesmen of the various nations started leaving London last night for their homes following the sessions of the council of the League of Nations held here to consider Germany's action in remilitarizing the Rhineland. While the League council yesterday condemned the German action in military re-occupation of the Rhineland, there has been no move whatever in the direction of immediate insistence that she evacuate. Nor is there any expectation that Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler will withdraw in any way. Meantime, Hitler's peace plan is being held awaiting a general disarmament and peace conference which it is expected will be held in the near future.

The veteran lighthouse steamer Newington, Capt. The vessel was reported this afternoon to be in a fairly safe position with a list of 10 to 15 degrees. She had not been damaged so far but might be from a heavy westerly swell unless she is pulled off soon. Efforts will be made to refloat her on the next high tide late tonight.

LIKES TUNE OF ANTHEM

Professor MacDonald Interests Rotary Club in Address on Poetry And Modern Thought

The music of "O Canada" is dignified and easy to sing as a national anthem should be but most people do not sing it because Canada is too new a country to have a national anthem, according to Professor W. L. MacDonald of the University of B.C. who addressed the Rotary Club at its luncheon meeting yesterday. The professor said he found that different groups sang different words, each according to individual preferences. In years to come the country would find words that expressed their aspirations and he hoped when that time came they would be singing them to the same tune used now.

Wilentz Meets Dr. Condon and Meeting with Governor Hoffman Will Also be Held

NEW YORK, March 20.—Attorney General David T. Wilentz of New Jersey was in conference yesterday with Dr. J. F. Condon, chief witness in the Lindbergh-Hauptmann kidnap-murder case, but no inkling was given of what transpired apart from the statement that Wilentz had arranged for an interview between Governor Harold Hoffman and Condon. There appears to be little chance of Hauptmann further evading the imposition of the death penalty, probably on the morning of March 31.

A VARIED CAREER

Venizelos of Greece was one of the colorful characters of the past half century. He was an example of a man with fine ideals who strove for them at risk of life and reputation and who ended his life banished from his native country. Through the devious turns of a varied political life Venizelos tried to bring order out of chaos in his native country but the times were troubled and in the end the people decided to turn back the clock and revert from a republic to a monarchy.

It is too soon to decide how often Venizelos was right or how often wrong but he did much to educate his countrymen in the principles of democracy and historians of the future will undoubtedly give him a high place in the development of his country.

BREAKER OF TREATIES

The League of Nations has branded Germany as a breaker of treaties and the curious thing is that Italy voted for the motion. Germany is defiant and it will be interesting to note what means will be taken to punish her for her occupation of the Rhineland. Evidently there is no proposal at present to apply military sanctions but it may be possible to apply trade and other sanctions that may be more effective and not so costly as application of military force.

This is the third time that the League has acted. In the first case Japan withdrew and carried out her policy alone without hindrance or the application of sanctions. In the second case Italy tried to do the same but met with stubborn opposition from the League and the application of minor sanctions. Now another crisis has brought an almost unanimous verdict from the League with the possibility of action. What will be interesting to note will be the efficacy of league sanctions in face of the fiery oratory of Hitler and the cheers of his followers.

PLAYS ARE PRESENTED

Students of King Edward High School Acquit Themselves Creditably

The auditorium of First Presbyterian Church was well filled last evening with friends of the King Edward High School and its pupils to witness the first presentation of this season of the High School Dramatic Club.

The program consisted of three one-act plays of widely different types, all of which were excellently presented. Judging from the applause of the audience they were much enjoyed and greatly appreciated. Many of the faults common to most amateur performances, such as delays in making entrances, poor enunciation and dependence on the prompter, were conspicuous by their absence. Great credit is due Roth Gordon, the director, as each play bore evidences of careful, painstaking guidance with special attention given to the little details which often raise a performance from the level of the average to a really fine production.

The first play, "Not Quite Such a Goose," a comedy, proved highly diverting and perhaps was the cleverest of the evening. Eileen Hamblin played the part of the happy mother well though one wished at times that she were more cheery. Dick Clark, in the role of an irrepressible boy of seventeen, was convincing and highly entertaining. Margaret McLachlan and June Armour, in pleasing summer

NEW TREND IN NOVELS

Proletarian Prose Literature Discussed Interestingly by University Lecturer

"The Proletarian Novel," modern development in the field of literature, proved an interesting subject for discussion by Dr. W. L. MacDonald, Professor of English at the University of British Columbia, in speaking before a local audience at the City Hall last night. It was the second of two lectures given here by Dr. MacDonald in connection with the university extension work. He dealt with the different types of proletarian novel—the realistic and propagandistic—as exemplified in America, the countries of Western Europe, including Great Britain and Germany, and in Russia. Apparently, the speaker felt there was still room for development and considerable improvement in this still very young form of literature which typified a modern trend in economic belief.

Dr. MacDonald defined the proletarian novel as a form of fiction describing the lives of the working classes written by a worker or a sympathizer with their cause who has belief in the ultimate success of the Marxian philosophy. In such novels, dealing with environment, fears, hopes, success and failure of the workers, there was usually absence of an individual hero, the story instead revolving around a group of workers and their families. Usually general labor unrest and the class war as between the workers and the capitalists were depicted. There was the type of proletarian novel produced in the country which was still capitalistic and that which was produced in Russia. In the case of the former there could be realism with the employer or the boss as well as the worker sometimes placed in a favorable light. In the propagandistic type, however, only the one side could be presented. Of course, in countries under a dictatorship such as Germany and Italy there could be no freedom of expression of political thought unless it favored the government.

Forerunners of Type

Dr. MacDonald described Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" and Jack London's "The Iron Heel" and "People of the Abyss" as types of proletarian novels produced in the United States long before the Russian revolution. Western Europe had so far, produced little in the way of proletarian novels. In England there was less of the revolutionary spirit displayed than in any other country although the speaker predicted that there might soon be a more marked tendency in this direction. Russia, where communism had triumphed over capitalism, was the home and origin of the proletarian novel of the propagandistic type but it was strictly censored, not necessarily giving the truth but depicting conditions as the government thought they should be. Individual consciousness was replaced by mass consciousness. Love and family were made secondary to the state in literature as well as in real life.

A serious defect in the proletarian novel, the speaker thought, was that a sense of humor was completely lacking. It was permeated with violence and enmity, actuated by hatred and fury. There seemed to be little place for beauty, which was an essential art, in the writer of hatred, violence and propaganda unless loyalty and self-sacrifice to labor might be called beauty. Of course, this type of novel was still new and in process of development.

G. P. Lyons presided over the meeting and a vote of thanks was tendered Dr. MacDonald on motion of T. J. Williams.

WATERFRONT FILM HERE

Jean Harlow in "Riff Raff" Showing This Week-End At Capitol

Given what is said to be the most dramatic role of her career in a vital story of stormy love against a waterfront setting, Jean Harlow comes to the screen of the Capitol Theatre here this week-end in "Riff Raff." She is teamed with Spencer Tracy who, as her dashing, swaggering, two-fisted lover, gives a virile characterization. Pathos and swift-flowing action abound. Una Merkel plays the part of a down-trodden wife who says that "all she got out of marriage was two children and the lumbago." Joseph Calleia plays with skill the role of a wealthy, domineering cannery owner. The cast also includes Mickey Rooney, J. Farrell MacDonald and Roger Imhoff.

In this picture Miss Harlow has adopted soft, silky brown hair in place of her famous platinum blonde tresses and the new kind of locks are said to suit her very well.

The regular monthly meeting of the Prince Rupert Trades and Labor Council has been further postponed until next week.
