SALVATIONISTS SAID GOOD-BYE TO ENSIGN AND MRS. JOHNSTONE

Ensign and Mrs. Johnstone, founders of the Salvation Army Citadel in Prince Rupert, left by the Camosun Sunday afternoon. They were accompanied to the wharf by the local Army Corps with the Standard flying. Young Master George Johnstone, "the Dawson Drummer Boy," left by an earlier steamer accompanied by Lieut. Wright, who also goes with the Ensign to Moose Jaw. A hearty send-off was given the little party leaving by the Camosun, and Ensign Johnstone shouted back his thanks to Prince Rupert. "Be as good to our successors as you were to us" was his parting message.

CLERGYMAN COMMITS SUICIDE BY HANGING AT VANCOUVER

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Vancouver, Nov. 20.—Rev. W. T. Walker, an Anglican clergyman, committed suicide this morning by hanging himself at St. Luke's, where he lived thirty years ago. The unfortunate gentleman met with an accident some months ago at Merritt, where he was stationed and never fully recovered, his brain having become affected.

Boys Will be Boys
The Cleveland Comedy Co. left for Vancouver by the Camosun yesterday afternoon. So did Ensign Johnstone of the Salvation Army. It was a treat to see the large number of fine young men of Prince Rupert who turned out to the wharf "To see the Ensign off." General Booth would have been real pleased about it.

In Caxton's Day, the father of printing toiled over his types, setting each single letter by hand.

Today, the expert compositor with the latest form multiple type-setting machine-- the kind the News is having installed-- sits on a stool in front of his complicated machine and by pressing on his keyboard commands a range of five hundred

But, for a few days, while effecting the change, the News will have to fall back on the Caxton method of hand set type.
It will be a novel newspaper. It will have all the local stories and the news

FRANK BOWNESS MAKES GOOD WITH HIS HOTEL AT NEWTOWN

For long the cry has been for a decent restaurant and bunk house at the end of the train trip from Prince Rupert at Mile 100. The need has been at last most efficiently supplied by Frank Bowness who is so well known to all old timers of Rupert as the Pioneer Restaurant Caterer of the Rupert Road. In pioneer work of this kind friend Frank fairly shines, and exceedingly high compliment is given his new venture by all those who have partaken of his hospitality on the way down to Rupert after "mushing it" into Newton for the Van Arsdol train.

GOOSE BAY MINERS COMPLAINED TO ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE

It is rumored that a boat is on its way north to Goose Bay, sent by the attorney general in response to a wire sent by some of the miners who were laid off by the Granby Company after a few days work on the Hidden Creek mine. The boat will be too late to find the men as they left Goose Bay by the Venture. The Company's officials were dissatisfied with the men's efficiency and paid them off. There was no boat to take them south and they were kept at the rate of a dollar a day afterwards reduced to fifty cents. There was no disturbance. A Provincial Police Constable sent by Chief Owens to investigate has not yet returned.

EX-ALD. T. D. PATTULLO COMES BACK BUT DISCLAIMS THE DIVINE CALL

EX-ALD. T. D. PATTULLO

The genial gentleman whose photograph is published here, arrived in town today on the Princess May. He walked into the Daily News office while the proof-reader was busy reading the editorial article entitled "Wanted a good clean man for Mayor." It looked like a heaven sent answer, but Mr Pattullo shook his head and looked sceptical. His business down in Victoria is humming, and his trip to Rupert is made in the interests of Victoria clients. Duff is still the same consistent booster for Rupert he has always been.

The Daughters of the Empire will hold a meeting on Wednesday afternoon at 3.30 at the residence of Mrs. McMullin.

"THREE MACS" RETURN SAFE AND SOUND

They Were Picked Up by the Launch Flora Outside the Harbor in a Flat Bottomed Boat—Porcher Island Samaritans We Good to Them.

After an adventurous trip, the three young Rupert men, Donald McLeod, J. McRae and Angus McKenzie, are back again in the city safe and sound. They were picked up in Chatham Sound by the launch Flora, while making their third try to reach Prince Rupert from Porcher Island in a flat bottomed row boat. The launch Rover in which Constable

Forsyth is searching for them, has not yet returned. The young men succeeded in their land staking venture at Welcome Harbor, but were storm bound and driven ashore while trying to get back. They were well looked after by a rancher named Joe Boyd who picked them up and played the part of the Good Samaritan to them. The young men speak in the highest terms of the kindness of Joe Boyd and of the other ranchers they met on Porcher Island. The news of her son's safe return was at once conveyed to Mrs. McRae at the hospital where she lies recovering from a serious operation.

Wanted—A Good, Clean Man For Mayor

Although buried, as it were, in the editorial column, this is in the nature of an advertisement.

"Wanted, a Mayor for the city of Prince Rupert for the year 1912, a good, clean man with some business training and aptitude for work, preferably a man without any party affiliations.

The position is a hard one to fill, the problems of office being many and the city comprising several as yet, inharmonious elements. The pay $2,000 a year is not large.

On the other hand, an opportunity presents itself to the right man to do a great work by putting the city's finances on a sound footing by a successful debenture issue, by treating the city's problems from a business, and not from a party point of view, and by bringing the several warring camps of citizens to a better mutual understanding.

This town is chuck full of good fellows with a weakness for party politics. A good non-partisan Mayor who can help to save us all from ourselves will earn a monument for himself in days to come. He can count on the sympathy and support of the best men of both sides and of one newspaper at least.

So far the News has been unable to find the ideal man, but applications (in strictest confidence) are solicited from any and all who think they possess the necessary qualifications and are willing to take the chances."

THE Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

Wherein Enid was completely mistaken: she would never commit a greater error of judgment during the rest of her days.

When Pyne quitted the kitchen his intent was to reach Brand without delay. As he passed Mrs. Vanstarr's bedroom he paused. Something had delighted him immeasurably once the first shock of the intelligence had passed.

He seemed to be irresolute in his mind, for he waited some time on the landing before he knocked at the door and asked if Mrs. Vanstarr would come and speak to him.

"Are you alone?" she demanded, remaining invisible.

"Yes," he said.

Then she appeared, with that borrowed shawl still closely wrapped over her head and face.

"What is it?" she said wearily.

"You have had a letter from my uncle?"

"Yes, a charming letter, but I cannot understand it. He says that some very important and amazing event will detain him in Penzance after we reach the place. He goes on—but I will read it to you. I am quite bewildered."

She took a letter from her pocket and searched through its contents until she found a paragraph. She was about to read it aloud when someone came down the stairs. It was one of the officers, yet Mrs. Vanstarr was so flurried that she dropped the sheet of paper and bent to pick it up before Pyne could intervene.

"Oh, bother!" she cried. "I am dreadfully nervous, even now that we are in no further peril. This is what I wish you to hear."

And she read:

"Nothing but the most amazing and unlooked for circumstances would cause me to ask you to postpone the date of our marriage for at least a month after you reach shore. This is not the time, nor are your present surroundings the place for telling you why I make this request. Suffice it to say that I think, indeed, I am sure, a great happiness has come into my life, a happiness which you, as my wife soon to be, will share."

The American, whilst Mrs. Vanstarr was intent on her excerpts from his uncle's letter, studied all that was visible of her face. That which he saw there puzzled him. She had suffered no more than others, so he wondered why she wore such an air of settled melancholy. Throughout the lighthouse gloom was dispelled. The sick became well, the lethargic became lively. Even the tipplers of methylated spirits, deadly ill before, had worked like Trojans at the rope, as eager to rehabilitate their shattered character as to land the much-needed stores.

What trouble had befallen this woman so gracious, so facile, so worshipful in her charm of manner and utterance during the years he had known her, that she remained listless when all about her was life and joyance, she, the cynosure of many eyes by her costumes and graceful carriage, cowering from recognition? Here was a mystery, though she had repudiated the word, and a mystery which, thus far, defeated his sub-conscious efforts at solution.

She lifted her eyes to his. Her expression was forlorn, compelling pity by its utter desolation.

"What does he mean?" she asked, plaintively. "Why has he not spoken clearly? Can you tell me what it is, this great happiness, which has entered, so strangely, into his life and mine?"

He had never met any man who knew exactly what he meant to say, and exactly how to say it, better than Cyrus J. said Pyne.

"But he has written to you, surely. Does he give no hint?"

"His letter is a very short one. To be candid, I have hardly made myself acquainted with its contents as yet."

"You are fencing with me. You know, and you will tell."

Her mood changed so rapidly that Pyne was not wholly prepared for the attack.

"It is a good rule," he said, "never to pretend you can handle another man's affairs better than he can handle them himself."

He met her kindling glance firmly. The anger that scintillated in her eyes almost found utterance. But this clever woman of the world felt that nothing would be gained, perhaps a great deal lost, by any open display of temper.

She laughed scornfully.

"Mr. Traill is certainly the best judge of those worthy of his confidence. Excuse me if I spoke heatedly. Let matters remain where they are."

"Just a word, Mrs. Vanstarr. My uncle has written you fairly and squarely. He has not denied you his confidence. If I understood you, he has promised it to the fullest extent."

"Yes, that is true."

"Then what are we quarrelling about?"

He laughed in his careless way, to put her at her ease. She frowned meditatively. She, who could smile in such a dazzling fashion, had lost her art of late.

"You are right," she said slowly. "I am just a hysterical woman, starting at shadows, making mountains out of molehills. Forgive me."

As Pyne went up the stairs his reflections took this shape:

"The old man shied at telling her outright. I wonder why. He is chuck full of tact, the smoothest old boy I ever fell up against. He thinks there may have been little troubles here, perhaps. Well, I guess he's right."

In the service-room he found Brand cleaning a lamp calmly and methodically. All the stores had been carried downstairs, and the store-room key given over to the purser.

"I am glad you have turned up," said the lighthouse-keeper. "Oblige me by opening that locker and taking back the articles I purloined recently. If the purser asks for an explanation, tell him the truth, and say I am willing to eat this stuff now for my sins."

Pyne noticed that Brand's own letters lay in a small pile on the writing-desk. With two exceptions, they were unopened. As a matter of fact, he had glanced at the superscriptions, saying that they were from some strange strangers, and laid them aside until night fell and the lighting of the lamps would give him a spare moment.

"I'll do that with pleasure," said the American, "but there's one thing I want to discuss with you whilst there is a chance of being alone. My uncle says he has written to you."

"To me?"

"Yes. It deals with an important matter too. It concerns Enid."

"Mr. Traill has written to me about Enid?" repeated Brand, stopping his industrious polishing to see if Pyne were joking with him.

"That's so. See, here is his letter. It will tell its own story. Guess you'd better read it right away."

The young man picked up one of the sealed letters on the table and handed it to the other.

Setting aside a glass chimney and a wash-leather, Brand lost no time in reading Mr. Traill's communication.

Save that his lips tightened, and his face paled slightly, there was no outward indication of the tumult the written words must have created in his soul, for this is what met his astonished vision:

"Dear Mr. Brand—I hope soon to make your acquaintance. It will be an honor to meet a man who has done so much for those near and dear to me, but there is one reason why I am anxious to grasp your hand which is so utterly beyond your present knowledge that I deem it a duty to tell you the facts, to prepare you, in a word, to the company of Lieutenant Stanhope. We had a kindred inspiration. He, I understand, is in effect, if not in actual record, the accepted suitor of your adopted daughter, known as Miss Enid Trevillion. I, although an older man, can share his feelings, because I am engaged to be married to Mrs. Vanstarr, a lady whom I have by God's help, rescued."

Hence, Mr. Stanhope and I have almost lived together, ashore and afloat, during these troubled days. Naturally, he spoke of the girl he loves and told me something of her history. He described the brooch found on her clothing, and a Mr. Jones, retired from the lighthouse service, who was present when you saved the child from speedy death, informs me that her linen was marked 'E. T.'"

"These facts, combined with the date and Mr. Jones's description of the damaged boat, lead me to believe that the girl is my own daughter, Edith Traill, whom you have mercifully preserved to gladden the eyes of a father who mourned her death, and the death of her mother for nineteen years."

"I can say no more at present. I am not making inferences not justified in other ways. Nor am I setting up a father's claim to rob you of the affections of a beautiful and accomplished daughter. I will be content, more than content, if she can give to me a tithe of the love she owes to you, for, indeed, in Mr. Stanhope and all others who know you, you have eloquent witnesses."

"Yours most sincerely,

"Cyrus J. Traill."

"P.S. Let me add, as an afterthought, that only my nephew and you have received this information. The agonized suspense which the ladies must have endured on the rock is a trial more than sufficient to tax their powers. If as I expect, Mr. Stanhope meets you first, he will be guided wholly by your advice as to whether or not the matter shall be made known to your Enid—to my Edith—before she lands."

Brand dropped the letter and placed his hands over his face. He yielded for an instant to the stupor of the intelligence.

Pyne, as Constance had done, came near to him and said, with an odd despondency in his voice:

"Come right along, Mame. You'll be our family in future."

"Why should I hate anyone who brings rank and fortune to one of my little girls?"

"Well," went on Pyne anxiously, "she'll be Mrs. Stanhope, anyhow, before she's much older."

"That appears to be settled. All things have worked out for the best. Most certainly your excellency and I shall not fail out about Enid. If it comes to that, we must share her as a daughter."

Pyne brightened considerably as he learnt how Brand had taken the blow.

"Oh, bully!" he cried. "That's a clear way out. Do you know, I was beginning to feel scared. I didn't count a little bit on my respected uncle setting up a title to Enid!"

CHAPTER XVI.
STEPHEN BRAND EXPLAINS

They were interrupted. Elsie, with her golden hair and big blue eyes, pink cheeks and parted lips, appeared on the stairs. All that was visible was her head. She looked like one of Murillo's angels.

"Please, can Mame 'n' me see the man?" she asked, a trifle awed. She did not expect to encounter a stern-faced official in uniform.

"What man, dearie?" he said, and instantly the child gained confidence, with that prompt abandonment to a favorable first impression which marks the exceeding wisdom of children and dogs.

She directed an encouraging sotto voce down the stairs:

"Come right along, Mame."

Then she answered, clasping the hand of Pyne extended to her, but eyeing Brand the while:

"The man who brought the milk."

She wondered why they laughed, but the lighthouse-keeper caught her up in his arms.

"He has gone away, sweetheart," he said, "but when he comes in the morning I shall send for you and you will see him. You are the little girl who was injured, eh? Are you getting better?"

Elsie, having seen Mame safely extracted from the stair-way, became voluble.

"My elbow is stiff, but it doesn't hurt. I was feelin' pretty bad 'fore the milk came, but Mame 'n' me had a lovely lot, an' some beautiful jelly. Fine, wasn't it, Mame?"

"Squizzit!" agreed Mame.

"I think I'd like being here if there was more room," said the child. "An' why isn't there any washin'? Mame 'n' me is always bein' washed 'cept when we're here."

"Surely you have not kept your face as clean as it is now ever since you left the ship?"

"Oh, no," put in Mame. "We've just been rubbed with a hanky."

"And sent out to pay a call?"

"Not 'zactly," said truthful Mame. "Mr. Pyne told us to wait near the door."

"That's an old story now," intervened Pyne quickly. "Climb up on my shoulder and have a look at the sea. Perhaps there may be a ship, too."

"What did Mr. Pyne tell you?" whispered Brand, pretending to make a secret of it with Elsie.

"There didn't seem to be 'nuff to eat," he explained, seriously. "So Mr. Pyne kep' a bit of biscuit in his pocket, an' Mame 'n' me had a chew every time we saw him."

"H'm," murmured the man, glancing up at his young friend as he walked around the trimming-stage with the delighted Mame. "I suppose he asked you not to tell anybody?"

"We wasn't to tell Miss Constance or Miss Enid. An' they told us we wasn't to tell him about the sweet stuff they put in our tea. That is all. Funny, isn't it?"

Brand knew that these little ones were motherless. His eyes dimmed somewhat. Like all self-contained men, he detected any exhibition of sentiment.

"I say," he cried huskily to Pyne, "you must escort your friends back to their quarters. No more idling, please."

"An' you will really send for us tomorrow to see the milkman?" said Elsie. Notwithstanding his sudden gruffness, she was not afraid of him. She looked longingly at the great lamp and the twinkling diamonds of the dioptric lens.

"Yes, I will not forget. Good-bye, now, dearie."

The visit of the children had given him a timely reminder. As these two were now, so had his own loved ones been in years that might not be recalled.

The nest would soon be empty, the young birds flown. He realized that he would not be many days ashore before the young American to whom he had taken such a liking would come and land, and he would have to endure claim to Constance than Mr. Traill made with regard to Enid. Well, he must resign himself to these things, though no man ever lost two daughters under stranger conditions.

When Pyne returned, Brand was ready for him. The struggle was sharp, but it had ended.

"I would like you to read your uncle's letter," he said.

"I am clear in my mind as to the right course to adopt. If Mr. Traill wishes to win Enid's affections he will not take her by surprise. Indeed, he himself recognizes this element in the situation. You will not rush away from Penzance at once, I take it?"

"No, sir," said Pyne, with a delightful certainty of negation that caused a smile to brighten his hearer's face.

"I may not get clear of the rock for several days. There is much to place in order here. When we reach shore, I must help the men to make things ship-shape. Meanwhile, Stanhope—or Constance, whom you can take into your confidence—will smooth the way."

"No, sir," interrupted Pyne, even more emphatically. "When you come to know my uncle you will find that he plays the game all the time. If he is to be given a new parent the old one will make the gift. And that's a fact."

Brand waived the point.

"The girls have plenty to endure here without having this surprise sprung on them," he said. "I will write to Mr. Traill, and leave events ashore in his hands."

So, for a night and the better part of a day, the pillar locked in its recesses some new doubts and cogitations. As between the two men a stronger bond of sympathy was created. In these restless hours, was admirably tactful. He talked a great deal of his uncle. Soon, not only Brand, but the two girls, seemed to be well acquainted with a man they had never met.

With the morning tide the anarchy of the waves ceased. The children were brought to the lantern to witness a more majestic sight than the arrival of the "milkman." With the dawn the sun appeared, and the sea seemed to sink into long-deferred slumber under his potency.

The flood tide of the afternoon brought the unflinching tug, towing the Penzance life-boat. The crane was swung out and Jack Stanhope, as was his right, was first to be hoisted to the entrance and to exchange a hearty hand grip with Brand.

Behind the lighthouse-keeper were ranged many faces, but not that which the sailor sought.

"Where is Enid?" he asked, after the first words of congratulation were spoken. "Have you told her?"

"No. Here is Mr. Pyne. He will take you where we have decided."

The two young men looked at each other with frank friendliness.

"When we have a minute to spare you must take me to the gallery and explain just how you worked that trick," said Stanhope. "Brand's semaphore was to the point, but it omitted details."

"That is where I have the pull of you," responded Pyne with equal cordiality. "I don't require any telling about your work yesterday."

"Oh, people make such a fuss. What is there remarkable in guiding a boat through a rough sea?"

"I may be wrong, but it looks a heap harder than swarming up a pole."

In such wise did young Britain and young America pool-pool the idea that they had done aught heroic.

Indeed, their brief talk dealt next with Enid, and Lieutenant Stanhope, R.N., did not think he was outraging conventionality when he found Enid in the kitchen, and took her in his arms and kissed her.

Constance and Pyne discovered that the tug as seen through the window was the greatest of interest.

"You don't feel at all lonesome?" he murmured to her.

"Not in the least."

"It must do a fellow a heap of good to meet his best girl under such circumstances."

"Mr. Stanhope and my sister have been the greatest of friends for years."

"Is it possible to catch up? The last few days on the rock ought to figure high in aye-ayes."

"Jack," cried Constance, finding this direct attack somewhat disconcerting, "did my father say that any arrangements were to be made for landing?"

FIRST: "CATCH YOUR PRINTER"

DIRECTIONS FOR COOKING A HARE: FIRST—"CATCH YOUR HARE"

To produce good printing you must "first catch your printer." You can't get good printing from a poor printer, even if he works with never so good an equipment. If he lacks the "knack," the trained taste, the single-minded fondness for his work which great printers have, he will do poor printing for you. If he has all of these, and in addition to them adequate modern equipment, your printing will have distinction, salesmanship, the lure of type-beauty.

As this office produces good printing you may infer the presence of a good printer—who is "catchable."

FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD

We have just arranged with one of our clients to place forty-two lots on the market under exceptional advantages to the purchasers. The lots are some of the best in Sections 7 and 8. The prices are as low as any on the market, and the terms so easy—monthly—that anyone can buy. Along with this exceptional offer, each lot admits the purchaser to a drawing for a FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD. If you hold the lucky ticket the trip is yours; or you can surrender it for a cash consideration. The chances are good—one in forty-two. Come in and investigate.

"BLACK DEVIL" IN FIX

Famous Auto After Many Vicissitudes is Locked Up

Harry Sykes ran an auto some time ago in Rupert. It was called "that devilish black auto" by Ald. Newton. It went to Hazelton and there nearly ran itself to death. Returned to Rupert for repair at the Rupert Marine Depot it has been fitted with very nearly a new stock, lock and barrel. Now it comes out that Harry hasn't paid all he owes the Vancouver Automobile Company for the "black devil." The company claim the machine, but the Rupert Marine have a little bill which must be settled before the "black devil" can be allowed out. Guarding the "black devil" is the latest waterfront pastime.
