> Meanwhile Brand and the sorrowladen girls, ushered by obsequious servants to the entrance-hall, were constrained to comfort themselves with true British phlegm in view of the interest caused by their appearance.

> The hour was not late, about halfpast nine. Even whilst the hall porter was summoning a cab the news spread, within and without that the lighthouse-keeper and his daughters, whose exploits filled the minds of all men, were standing near the door.

Several people, complete strangers, came to them and offered warm congratulations. A smart journalist pressed forward and wove his own complimentary utterances into an interview. A crowd gatheren quickly on the pavement. Policemen, those marshalls of every English demonstration, cleared a path for them through the throng. So, with smiling words on their lips and anguish in their hearts, they made a triumphal exit. How little could the friendly enthusiasts who cheered them realize that these three had been atrophied by the some three had been atrophied by the d deadly malevolence of fate in the very hour when a great achievement had Enid suffered almost as keenly as Brand and his daughter. Their joys and sorrows were hers. The startling nature of Brand's avowal rendered it difficult for either Enid or Constance to piece together certain fragmentary memories of Mrs. Vansittart's odd be havior during her enforced sojourn on the rock. So thoroughly had she shattered those dimly outlined impressions by the quietly vivacious charm of her manner at dinner that they both experienced a jumble of sensations. A terrified woman, in wet and torn clothing, cowering in the gaunt interfor of a storm-girt lighthouse, is a very different being when attired in expensive garments and surrounded by the luxuries of a first-class hotel.

It was a relief to drive to their cot tage in silence, yet, so easily moulded is our human clay, it was a greater relief when the tension of the noisy rattle of the cab was relaxed. It cost some effort to assure Mrs. Sheppard, a buxom, motherly soul of sixty or thereabouts, that they could not possibly eat any supper. The effort was forthcoming. They pleaded weariness, and at last they were alone.

Constance knelt by her father's side when he dropped listlessly into the armchair placed in his accustomed

"Now, dad," she said, bravely unemotional, "there will be no more tears, Tell me all that I ought to know." Enid drew a hassock to his feet and seated herself there, clasping her hands about her knees. "Whatever she did I am sorry for her." said the girl decisively. "And she cannot have been a really bad woman, dad, or you would not have loved her once." Brand sighed deeply. His strong will had deserted him for a little while. He shrank from the ordeal before him. Why should he be called on to sully the mirror of his daughter's innocence by revealing to her the disgrace of her mother? Constance caught something of the dread in his soul. "Don't tell me if it hurts you, dad.

"You forget, Enid, that there is . grave chance of you, at any rate, leaving me for another," he said. She blushed.

"That is the worst of girls getting married," she protested. "They are supposed to be delighted because they are going to live with strange people Girls who are of that mind cannot happy at home. If I thought that being married to Jack implied separation saw your mother to-night, Enid also saw her father. I have known for two days that Enid's father is Mr. Traill." For an instant, it must be confessed, Constance and Enid alike feared that the mental and physical strain he had undergone had temporarily deranged him. It was not sheer incredulity but real terror he saw in their eyes. Somehow, their self-effacement in his behalf touched him more keenly than anything else had done during this troubled period. He bowed his head. A strong man in agony cannot endure the scrutiny of loving eyes.

"Enid," he said brokenly, "my words to you must be few. Good fortune needs but slight explanation. The proofs of my statement I do not possess, but Mr. Traill's letter to me could not have been written by such man if he were not sure of his facts. Here it is. Read it aloud."

He handed her her father's plainspoken communication. Constance. incapable of deeper depths of amaze ment than those now probed, looked over her sister's shoulder. Together they deciphered the somewhat diffi cult handwriting of a man whose chief task for years had been to sign his

"Indeed, Enid," murmured Con stance, "it sounds like the truth, else he would never have spoken so defi nitely of my father's claim on you affections."

THE BIG FIGHT

From many angles the biggest fight that has taken place in England years will be that between Jem; Driscoll, English featherweight champion, and Owen Moran. It is to be held December 2 at Birmingham, Moran's native city, and preparations are being made for the battle upon much the same scale as for a world's championship affair in the States. For Port Simpson Naas and Stewart, And in one respect at least the two will be very much alike. Exchanges For Masset and Naden Harbor every say the men in charge of the Driscoll-Moran affair are having tickets printed that are the exact replica of For Skidegate, Jewday, etc. those for the Johnson-Jeffries mill. Nothing of that sort has ever been seen in England. There will be accommodation for something over 17,- Railway service to Vanarsdol, mixed 000, and the price sale of seats will run all the way from five shillings to five guineas, the latter being, of course, the price for the choicest box and ringside seats. The building it- On your Christmas visit East travel about one-half that width. Although the boxers are to make weight the affair is not for any time. Driscoll has already gone into active training. The featherweight champion is, as usual, at Cardiff, while Owen Moran is quartered at Malvern.

The bout is to be refereed by Eugene Corri, and Corri's very presence in the ring will give it any tone it might otherwise lack through being staged outside of London and the National Sporting Club.

LORD DERBY AS WINNER

English sporting papers to hand by yesterday's mail contain a staistical B.C. Coast service - Famous Princess table of the winning breeders, owners, trainers and jockeys on the turf, compiled from March 20 to November 3, inclusive. Lord Derby heads the list of winning owners (his total winnings amounting to £41,460. During the season his nine horses won J. G. McNab twenty-eight big events. J. B. Joel, owner of the Derby winner this year, is second with winnings aggregating £34,629. Mr. Joel entered seventeen horses during the season and won thirty-five races. Lord Derby and Mr. Joel are the only owners who won above £10,000 during the season. Mr. Joel leads among winning breeders, while the leading trainer was Hon, G. Lambton. F. Wooten was the leading jockey, with a percentage of 25.29. He had 680 mounts during the season. His record shows 172 firsts, 136 seconds, 112 thirds and 260 unplaced. Mr. Fairie, who led the list of winning owners last year, is fourth on the list this year, his winnings during the season aggregating £9,607. Third place on the list is occupied by C. E. Howard, who won £10.014.
