SIR CHARLES BERESFORD WILL SUPPORT CHURCHILL

The Ex-Admiral Says That His Young Political Opponent is the Best Head the Navy Has Ever Had, and He Will Support Him

London, Nov. 27.—Lord Charles Beresford, who recently electrified British public opinion by declaring that England had only twelve ships that were in condition to go to war, has come out with a public statement to the effect that he will support Mr. Winston Churchill, the new First Lord of the Admiralty, in spite of the fact that he and Churchill have been political enemies for a long time.

The retired Admiral declares that Churchill is a strong man, and intensely hated abroad, and since accepting the headship of the Admiralty had shown that he will become the best civil head that the navy has ever had. A few weeks ago Sir Charles withdrew from publication his book attacking the navy, which had just been sent out for review, stating that since it had gone to press he had learned that Mr. Churchill had of his own volition set out to effect the reforms that his book was written to procure.

DESTROYED IN LESS THAN TWENTY MINUTES

Fire, which broke out from a defect in the heating apparatus of the Provincial Government building resulted in the complete destruction of that building at 2.30 this afternoon. Within twenty minutes of the outbreak only the cement vault and a brick chimney stack remained.

For a long time the Land Registry Office was in danger. It caught fire, but a change in the wind gave the fire-fighters a chance, and they saved the building. Documents from the two offices are scattered all over the townsite by the winds.

Hundreds of citizens deserve thanks for the way in which they turned in to help. Had it not been for the segregated character of the Government Buildings, a disastrous fire that would have swept the townsite would have ensued.

KING AND QUEEN ARRIVE AT THE PORT OF ADEN

They Had a Narrow Escape From a Night Attack From an Italian Cruiser in the Mediterranean—Arab Chiefs Pay Their Homage

(Canadian Press Despatch.)
 Aden, Nov. 27.—Their Majesties, the King and Queen of England, arrived here on the steamer Medina yesterday on the way to the Indian Durbar with an escort of six cruisers, and were welcomed by the whole garrison. A banquet was given, at which leading Arab chiefs of Hinterland offered their allegiance. It was a brilliant scene, with the first real touch of Oriental color. During the trip to Aden the powerful British squadron escorting the Monarchs several times encountered the scouts of Italian and Turkish fleets, but after salutes these drew off, though at one time there was a narrow escape of a night attack by a panic-stricken Italian cruiser which came up without lights. The British East Indian squadron of gunboats has left the Persian gun runners to their own devices for a little while and will now escort the Medina as far as Bombay.

SAYS IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO PROTECT THE CITIZENS

City Engineer Declares That it is Unwise to Attempt to Protect Any Danger Points Without Protecting All of Them

On the subject of railing in the points on the various street grading works in hand where pedestrians run risk of serious fall, City Engineer Davis remarked this morning that it would be impractical to attempt any such system of protection.

Citizens as a rule are wary enough to take care of themselves in going about the streets, and warnings are posted at many points. To rail off a few danger points and not all would tend to put pedestrians off their guard, while to rail all would be practically impossible in a city like this is at present.

"With such extensive work going on on the streets in a city in the making such as this," he said "there are not one or two, but several hundred such dangerous places.

SEWER BY-LAW IS DEFEATED

Hays Creek Residents Came Down Solid to Vote Against the Proposal to Empty City Sewage at Their Doors

VOTE WAS 86 FOR AND 184 AGAINST

Statements of City Officers on the Result—Ald. Hilditch Says That Sooner or Later the Scheme Will Have to be Taken Up—City Engineer Regrets That the People Did Not See Their Way to Pass It—The Mayor is Mum and Will Not Speak

HOW THE VOTE WENT.
 Against the bylaw... 184
 For the bylaw... 86
 Majority against... 98
 There were seven spoiled votes.

The following short statements from various parties were made this morning:
The City Engineer.
 "I regret the defeat of the bylaw because it delays the sewerage of Section Five, where sewers are urgently needed."
Ald. Hilditch Satisfied.
 "The people's verdict is perfectly satisfactory to me, but I am still of opinion that no matter where the trunk sewer is put in it will go in the same place as originally intended. The onus of responsibility for the lack of sewerage should rest with those who defeated the bylaw, and with their advisers."
Ald. Clayton's Prediction.
 "I rather think that when it comes up again there will be a danger that the people at the other end of the city who did not vote on Saturday may turn it down again."
Mayor is Mum.
 "The matter will come up in due course at the Council meeting tonight when the returning officer reports on it formally. Until then I have nothing to say about it."

completely defeated.

The above figures tell about all that is to be said of the ratepayers' attitude toward the bylaw to raise $75,000 to build a trunk sewer down Hays Creek from manhole 8 to manhole 28. As the bylaw required a majority of three-fifths of the total vote polled to carry it, it was very

IN THE DARKNESS, JOHN CRAWFORD FELL OFF SIDEWALK TO HIS DEATH

Sad Accident at Unprotected Danger Spot at the Corner of Second Ave. and Eighth Street—Lay All Night on the Rocks With His Skull Smashed In Falling a distance of 10 feet in the darkness over the unprotected sidewalk at the corner of Second Avenue and Eighth St., J. Crawford, a well built young man, met an instant death by smashing his skull on the rocks beneath. The accident occurred late on Saturday night no one knows exactly when.

work for the G.T.P. up river, edge of the grade falling with force enough to jam his head tightly in between two rocks. There was an ugly wound on one side of his head, and the skull was fractured. Death had probably been swift and painless. Dr. Reddie remarked that had anyone seen the man fall, and immediately rescued him even then he would have had but one chance in a hundred of recovering. The distance he fell was only about 10 feet, but deceased was a man of fully 180 pounds weight.
 Dr. Reddie, who examined the body says that death was caused by concussion of the brain.

Returning to Rupert, he boarded for a time at the Grand hotel, from which house he was moving to the St. James Hotel, where he had previously put up, when he met his death. Deceased had been drinking or he would not have lost his balance so easily. Prince Rupert is in present in place for a tipsy man to roam around in.

Two Boys Saw Him.
 The gruesome discovery was not made till next morning when the two little sons of Mr. John Currie saw the body with outstretched arms. They at once told Mr. Thomas Trotter, who informed the police. It was evident from the state of the body that it had lain there several hours, as it was frost-bitten in several places.

A BARGAIN INDEED.

It would be impossible to figure what a benefit the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal has been to the west. It affords the greatest amount of genuine good reading for every member of the family and its benefits to the farming community in its agricultural pages are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars every year. It is not merely a theoretical paper. It is a practical farm paper in every respect and there is no farmer in Canada who cannot profit by reading it. Two cents a week, one dollar a year—the price of one bushel of wheat for a whole year's subscription to that great paper, not to speak of the beautiful premium picture "Home Again," size 22x29 inches, ready for framing. It makes one wonder if the publishers pay their paper bills. Any home in this western country that does not receive the Family Herald and Weekly Star for 1912 will miss a bargain indeed.

DAILY EDITION.

MONDAY, NOV. 27

THE RESULT OF THE VOTE.

As was expected, the ratepayers have voted against the trunk sewer bylaw. The vote, while light, was unmistakable. However much the people want a trunk sewer, they do not want the kind of trunk sewer proposed in Saturday's bylaw. The people most directly affected, those living in the vicinity of Hay's Creek, were the most active in opposing the scheme.

The opposition was not to spending $75,000, or an even larger sum, on a proper trunk sewer. The opposition was to spending that amount of money on a sewer that was left unprovided with a proper outlet to tidewater. The opposition was to the menace implied in the proposal to empty the city's sewage into a creek that for half the time every day runs dry. The city is quite prepared to endorse a sewer project that will provide for the sanitary disposition of the garbage after collecting it.

The opposition is also in the nature of a vote of no confidence in the Health Officer, who contributed to the Council's downfall by reporting to them that "sewage matter, well diluted and exposed, becomes rapidly innocuous" and that "an open sewer passing through a populous district, however objectionable, is not necessarily a danger to health." These sanitary ideals on which the Health Officer urged the prosecution of the scheme to empty the city's sewage into Hay's Creek are so contrary to the popularly held that they doubtless contributed largely to the bylaw's defeat.

Even if an open sewer passing through a populous district of Prince Rupert could be proved to be a source of health—and some doctors recommend sulphuretted hydrogen, the gas which lends character to decayed eggs, as a remedy for indigestion—an elixir so offensive as an open sewer could never hope to prove popular with the multitude.

It will be one of the first duties of the next City Council to bring down a scheme for a trunk sewer connecting with tidewater. It will pass the rate payers without a dissenting voice.

THE Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

"Excuse me getting down," said Pyne. "I dispossed with a groom."

"I guess you know the roads round here," she climbed into the seat beside him.

"It is very good of you to take this trouble," she said, and when he looked at her a slight color was visible through the veil.

"How is your mother?" he asked abruptly. He felt, rather than saw, her start of surprise.

She did not expect the relationship to be acknowledged with such sudden candor.

"She is much better," she assured him.

"That's all right," he announced, as if a load were off his mind. And then, somewhat to her mystification, he entertained her with the news.

Elsie and Mamie had quitted Penzance the previous evening, an aunt having traveled from Boston as soon as the first tidings of the wreck reached her.

"She was a young, nice-looking aunt, too," he said, cheerfully. "And I was powerfully fond of those two kiddies."

"The association of ideas might prove helpful," she suggested, with a touch of her old manner.

"That is what struck Elsie," he admitted. "She said she didn't know why I couldn't marry. Aunt Louisa right off, and then we could all live together sociably."

"Oh! And what did the lady say?" "She thought it was a great joke, until I said that unfortunately I had made other arrangements. Then she guessed her niece had got a bit out of hand."

"Have you seen the poor fellow whose arm was broken? Enid has not had a moment to give me details of events since we landed."

From that point their conversation dealt with generalities. Soon the girl perceived his intent. His sole desire was to place a bar to make her realize that no matter what troubles life held they could be vanquished with a smile. She responded to his mood, and enlivened the drive with comments on the people they met and the houses and villages they passed. For two hours the world went well because it was forgotten.

Enid, the conspirator, waited until the pair in the dog-cart were out of sight. Then she went to the little room at the back of the cottage where Brand preferred to be busily engaged in compiling a scientific account of his adventures.

"I am going out, dad," she said, trying to appear unconcerned.

"All right," he answered, laying down his pipe.

"I only came to tell you because Mrs. Sheppard is out, too."

Obviously Enid was determined that if Pyne's calculations were worth anything they should have fair play.

"Oh," he commented sharply, "but the maid is in?"

"Yes. She is such a stupid girl in some things. If—if our guest rings you will hear her. Would you mind asking Mary what it is in case she gets muddled?"

He glanced at her. She was pulling on her gloves, and vastly bothered by a refractory button.

"If I hear the bell, I will inquire," he said, and she escaped, feeling quite wicked.

When he was alone, he did not resume his task. In the next room, separated from him only by a brick wall, was his wife. A wall! Why should there always be a wall between them? It was not of his building. Had she made it impassable during the long years? And what would be the outcome, now that Constance was in daily communion with her mother? The doctor, in kindly ignorance, had told him that Mrs. Vansittart was convalescent and would be able to travel in a few days. In response to a question, the doctor added that the lady herself asked when she might be moved.

What was her plan? Mr. Traill, that day, had written him a sympathetic letter, mentioning the fact that Mrs. Vansittart had voluntarily resigned her promise to marry him, and, indeed, judged by the light of present knowledge, had determined on that course since she first knew that her former husband was living.

A sudden brain pusher back his chair from the desk at which he sat.

"The young dog!" he growled. He had in fact followed the exact mental process which Pyne mapped out for him. The letter, the drive, Mrs. Sheppard's absence, Enid's uneasy wriggling at the door, were all parts of an ordered plan. He was to be given an opportunity of seeing his wife and disentangling the twisted strands of twenty years. He rose impatiently, and paced the room, quietly withal, lest the woman in the next room should hear him. A decision had been forced on him. He could shrink it no longer.

"Pyne has contrived this," he muttered. "He thinks he can see more clearly into the future than a man twice his age. Enid is in the plot, too. And Connie! No, not Connie. Dear heart! She is a win for a fella, yet she never once mentioned her mother to me since she carried her into the house like an ailing child."

Back and forth he walked, wrestling with the problem. See his wife he must, and before she quitted Cornwall. Was it advisable, in her present state of health, to take her by surprise? Pyne evidently thought so. And the doctor! Good Heavens! was the doctor in the thing, too?

At last, he tugged at the bell.

"Mary," he said, "ask Mrs. Vansittart if she feels able to see Mr. Brand."

There; it was done. Mary, rose-checked and soft of speech, dreading only Mrs. Sheppard's matronly eye, knocked at the door of the sitting-room. He heard her deliver his message. There was no audible answer. She was in with a felly, hoping against hope that no ill result might be forthcoming to the invalid thus taken by surprise, when he thought Mary's formal "yes," and the girl came to him.

"Please, sir," she said, "the lady says she is anxious to see you."

He walked firmly to the door, opened it and entered. He had made up his mind what to say and how to say it. It would be best to ask his wife to discuss matters in a friendly spirit, and, for their daughter's sake, agree to some arrangement whereby Constance should see her occasionally. There need be no tears, no recriminations, no painful raking through the dust-heaps of the vanished years. The passion, the agony, of the old days was dead. The secret had been kept. It was known only to those whom they could trust, and they might part without heart-burnings, whilst Constance would be spared the suffering of knowing that her mother and she were separated forever.

These things were well ordered in his brain when he looked at his wife. She was seated near the window, and her beautiful eyes, brilliant as ever, were fixed on his with harrowing intensity. They shone with the dumb pain of a wounded animal.

He walked towards her and held out his hand. Her illness had brought out certain resemblances to Constance. She looked younger, as some women do look after illness, and she could not, even had he harbored the thought, use cruel words to this wan, stricken woman, the wife whom he had loved and for whom he had suffered.

"Nanette," he said, with utmost gentleness, "do not be distressed. Indeed, there is no reason why our meeting should be painful. It is better that we should have a quiet talk than that we should part again in anger and bitterness."

She caught his hand in both of hers. Still she said nothing. Her large eyes gazed up at him as if she sought to read in his face the thoughts he might not utter. The memories he might not recall. Her lips distended. He saw her mouth twitching at the corners.

"Nanette," he said again, though his voice was not well under control, and something rose in his throat and stifled him. "I appeal to you not to give way to emotion. You may become ill again—and I would never forgive myself."

Still clinging to his hand, she sank on her knees by his side. But there was no wild burst of tears; her sorrow was too deep for such kindly aid.

"Stephen," she whispered faintly, "I cannot ask you to forget, but you have spoken of forgiveness. Can you forgive?"

He bent over her and would have raised her; she clung to him with such energy that he desisted.

"My poor wife!" he murmured, "who am I that I should deny that which I hope to obtain from my Creator?"

"But—" she panted, in that unerring whisper—"I treated you so vilely. I left you to join that man you had fought to save me. I deserted my husband and my child for the sake of the money he bequeathed to me. In the last of wealth I strove to crush you out of my heart. And now that God has humbled me I must humble myself. Stephen, I am not your wife. I obtained a divorce."

"Nanette," he cried, "I cannot bear to see you kneeling at my feet. I ask no revelations. I forgive you any wrong you may have done me, fully and freely, as I hope to be forgiven."

She yielded to his pleading and allowed him to raise her. For an instant she was clasped to his breast.

"It would be happiness to die in your arms, Stephen," she said, wildly. "I do not deserve it, I know, but Heaven is merciful."

The dreadful idea possessed him that in her weak state this passionate wish might be granted.

"Nanette," he cried, "you must control yourself. If you will not promise to sit down and talk quietly I will leave you."

She obeyed him instantly.

"I don't care how much you scold me," she said, "but you must not go away. I meant to see you before I left Penzance. I came here that night. I looked through the window. I saw my daughter and her adopted sister listening to you and weeping because of a mother's shame. Then I must have lost my senses. I ran away. I remember nothing else until I woke up to find Constance caring for me in your house."

He tried to break in upon the trend of her thought. This was by no means the line he had intended to pursue. His hope was to soothe and calm her, to part from her in amity and without giving her cause to deplore a loss of dignity.

"I am only too pleased that when illness overtook you you were committed to my care and to Constance. Poor girl! She thought you were dead."

"Did you tell her that?" "No, but I allowed it to be assumed, which is the same thing."

"When did she know the truth?" "In the hotel—after you left the room. I had to say something. It was better—for you—that I should say you were my wife."

"So, even in that trying moment, you strove to shield me from unjust suspicions. Stephen, how could I have acted towards you as I did?"

Again he endeavored to lead her to talk of the future rather than the past.

"There is one great surprise in store for you," he said. "But it is a pleasant one in every way. Enid is Mr. Traill's daughter."

"I am glad," she said simply. "I do not understand, but you must tell me another time. Just now, I can think only of you, and of myself. You must listen, Stephen. I will do all that you demand, hide myself anywhere, but you must know everything. When we parted, when I deserted you to nurse a winning man, and perhaps my good looks kept me in a certain set, I felt that our friends invariably took your side and despised me. That embittered me the more. At last your father died, and I saw some vague reference to your disappearance from society. I employed agents to trace you. They failed. Then I went to America and lived on a ranch in Nebraska, where I obtained a divorce from you on the ground of desertion. Desertion, Stephen! That was the plea I raised."

FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD

We have just arranged with one of our clients to place forty-two lots on the market under exceptional advantages to the purchasers. The lots are some of the best in Sections 7 and 8. The prices are as low as any on the market, and the terms so easy—monthly—that anyone can buy. Along with this exceptional offer, each lot admits the purchaser to a drawing for a FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD. If you hold the lucky ticket the trip is yours; or you can surrender it for a cash consideration. The chances are good—one in forty-two. Come in and investigate.

STYLES FOR CHILDREN

It is More Difficult to Get Them Right Than for Grown-Ups.

In the thoughts of dress and styles we must not forget the children, and never wear hats for the little ones more charming than this year. For the most part they are close fitting, quaint little bonnet shapes of fur are being shown, and Tam O'Shanter. The crown of one seen in Victoria last week was of pearl gray beaver, while the head band was corded with lace frills and a rosette of lace. Another was a turban of white fox with a frill of fur on one side. This is worn with a neck piece of the same fur finished with frills of fur at the bottom of the neck piece. And what would be even more sweet and pretty for the kiddie would be a coat and muff to match. What little pink-cheeked tot would not look altogether kissable in such a costume?

Don't Buy Coal

... ITEMS OF ... SPORT!

A storm of protest has been aroused in Masonic circles by the initiation of Jack Johnson into the Forfarshire and Kin-cardinshire lodge of Free Masons.

Welch will referee the Wol-gast-Welsh fight at Los Angeles on November 30 for the light-weight championship of the world.

Courdareli, the giant Turk, touted as a coming world beater, who has arrived from his native land with an offer to throw any man in the world, failed to make good at his first appearance in Montreal last week. He was billed to throw Raymond Caseaux four times within an hour, but failed to take a single fall from the Frenchman. The Turk weighed in at 300 pounds, having nearly 75 pounds the advantage of the Frenchman, but though he was on top most of the time, he could not pin the lighter man's shoulders to the mat. Courdareli seemed to be in poor condition, and was much distressed toward the end. The men wrestled at Graeco-Roman, which the Turk's manager claimed was a handicap, as his man is a catch-as-catch-can artist.

Tommy Dunderdale, Winnipeg's star hockeyist, may follow the crowd to the coast and line up with one of the Patrik teams in Vancouver or Victoria. Tommy has received a long letter from Frank Patrik offering him $1,000 for the season, which is indeed a very flattering offer. However, Tommy has decided to give the Quebec team first chance and if the will come through with the same salary he will hike for the ancient capital.

Ottawa, Nov. 26.—Jack Williams, the peerless center half of the Ottawa football club, has announced that he would leave about January 1 for Regina, where he has accepted a position in the real estate business with Morgan O'Brien. It is also said that Charlie Disney and Stuart Robertson of the Ottawas will accompany him, though they have not yet closed.
