WAS UNIQUE JOURNALIST

KANSAS CITY, October 4: (AP)-Edgar Watson Howe, editor, author and village sage, died yesterday in his eighty-fourth year. He made his living and gained a large measure of his fame by giving advicea commodity for which few people find a market.

For more than 50 years Ed Howe, as he preferred to be known, preached the doctrine of success and respectability. He preached without pretence, without fuss, and in direct and simple language. Many who read his writings felt that they had been stripped bare and left exposed in the market place

It was through the Atchison (Kansas) Globe, which he founded in 1877, that Ed Howe first became known. His homely philosophy and unique style intrigued his readers and they delighter in quoting his newspaper.

When he was in his twenties he wrote "The Story of A Country Town," a novel which still has a steady sale. His subsequent writings made him an international figure though no subsequent book was as good as his first.

Mr. Howe retired as publisher of the Globe in 1914. He was succeeded by a company, stock of which was owned by employees with controlling interest vested in his son, Eugene A. Howe, who became edi-

From that time publication of 'Ed Howe's Monthly" served as the father's recreation and as a vehicle for the expression of his personal views. It had readers in all parts of the world, including such extremes as John D. Rockefeller and H. G. Wells. The editor's own description of this publication was "A journal of indignation and education."

In addition to his own magazine steady contributions to a number of leading magazines and syndicated writing for daily newspapers occupied much of the small town philosopher's time.

Mr. Howe was born near Treaty, Ind., May 3, 1854. As a youth he learned the printing trade and worked in various newspaper shops EDMONTON, Oct. 4: - The Al- NEW YORK: (CP) -Bar sil- in the middle west. He published The Atchison Globe.

CAMPBELL AND WOOD MAY START INTERNATIONAL SPEEDBOAT RIVALRY

Since Sir Malcolm Campbell of England turned his attention to speedooat racing, there has loomed the possibility of international rivalry between the British speed king and Gar Wood, Wood, American speedboat driver, held the water record for some time, but since Campbell raced his new boat over the measured mile, he no longer can claim the record because Sir Malcolm states he achieved a speed of 125.798 m.p.h. This layout shows the two speedboats and their drivers. Bluebird, Sir Malcolm's boat, named after his famous racing car in which he set the land speed record, is seen at top, prior to being launched in Switzerland for his speed test. Gar Wood's boat which retained the Harmsworth trophy for the U.S., is pictured below, while Campbell is seen fitting on his helmet at the left. Gar Wood, American speedboat king, is seen in
