The Final Judgment

The final judgment of the highest court has been received in regard to the constitutionality of a number of important laws. This judgment outlines with more or less clearness what the federal government may do and what it may not do under the present constitution of the country. Unemployment insurance is evidently a matter for a provincial government if it is found to be desirable. Minimum wage laws are matters for the provinces and so are marketing laws. The Farmers Creditors Act and the law providing for regulation of trade practices come under federal jurisdiction.

The highest court of the land for the handling of constitutional matters is the privy council of Great Britain, the judicial committee of which is assigned to deal FOR SALE Cary Safe, 4 ft. high, to be the best of the evening with
