A NEAR TRAGEDY

The Letter Box

Editor, Daily News: The writer has just drunk a toast to the taxi driver of Prince Rupert. As I finished my lone lunch and looked out upon the most enchanting scene in the whole world with its distant snow-capped mountains, its nearer purple shadows and scintillating waters of the harbor, the flitting swallows, the fearless puncos, the saucy equirrels and breathed air, an alchemy of sea tang, pines and flowers, I lifted my cup (of tea) and exclaimed "Here's to Prince Rupert's natural lovliness, God bless it, and here's to her taxi drivers, God bless them."

Why the effusions? Because I am still spared to enjoy the one and commend the other.

Yesterday morning about 11:30 the writer was a near participant in what might have been a very sad accidenet, which was only averted by the level-headedness, fine judgment and instant action on the part of a taxi driver in whose car I was

When at the junction of Third Avenue and First Street, and travelling at fair speed, a child dashed across directly in front of an oncoming truck and directly in front of our car going in opposite direction. A tragedy seemed inevitable. But that expert, experienced and level-headed driver jammed on the brakes and we came to a stop practically touching the indifferent child. The driver was somewhat shaken up, so was I. In about a alf a minute I burst out laughing. 'What are you laughing at? I don't see anything funny about it. "Never mind old man." I said. But that accident put me in mind of a cartoon in McLean's with this caption "When I say brakes I mean brakes" for, when the motorist threw in his brakes, the chassis remained stationary while the body of the car went hurtling into space. It came to such a sudden stop that if it had not been for the windshield I should possibly have been on my way to the hospital or a little later to Fairview.

Had the accident happened the been deluged with sympathy, condolonce and flowers and the taxi driver arrested for manslaughter. Ladies over their tea or bridge would discuss the d. . . taxi drivers (D. stands for decent), forgetful in the proper instruction of their children as to their conduct while on the street. If they were as careful as the taxi driver is in the handling of his car accidents would seldom occur.

This incident is one of many the finest played so far this season such, I suppose. Considering our in the city. The standard of play narrow, slippery, uneven roadbeds is reserving of better suport in the and our many sidewalkless streets it is astonishing how few motor accidents there are in our city, due district were discussed.
