IMPERIALISM

Some of the Journals representing political groups which have never yet had the responsibility of office in Canada are constantly sneering at anything having to do with the consolidation of the British Empire and try to intimate that Canadians want to be Canadians but we are not so sure that these journals want to be Canadian. read their idle vaporings one would think that Britain benefited from being a part of the same Empire with Canada but that Canada would be better off alone. They alon speak of Canadian governments with the utmost discourtesy, using such expressions as "agents of parasitism."

We believe that governments of all British countries as at present constituted, are anxious to consolidate the Empire and, if the visit of the King and Queen will help to do that, so much the better: Anything they do is on the advice of one of their cabinets. The visit to Canada may be on the recommendation of the Canadian government or the government at London or of both. It is always understood that the King and Queen are out of politics. If they make a mistake, it is done on the advice of ministers who bear the responsibility.
