Migration South

Eleanor Nicholson of the Women's Overseas Settlement Board has waved goodbye to more than 500 women who have gone to South Africa, Australia and New Zealand to take jobs since the start of the year. School teachers and nurses have the best chances Correct qualifications are necessary. Pay is about the same a here, conditions with regard to time off and recreation are better | Eleanor Nicholson had also something to say on the subject of husband hunters. It seems that owing to the shortage of men in England some of the younger women get the idea they can use business as a trap for matrimony by getting jobs in the Dominions. "There may be more men but they are just as wary," is Eleanor's advice. "If you 5 are after your man take time off to get him but don't mix the two interests or you'll lose your job." She has watched developments since British women started to migrate through her society in 1925.
