The war is over and a peace compact signed. The two Prussia. great fighters, both named Manson, last night shook hands and How deeply His Majesty feels Britain. today might go on the calendar marked in red as "Handshaking = Day." We fought a good fight and we lost, but we have to admit that our opponents also put up a good fight, and while PRINCE RUPERT MAY BE COAST patting ourselves on the back have plenty of time to admire] their generalship and soldierly qualities. There will be peace and smiling even at the city council, although the Mayor did say some hot things about Dr. Clayton and both Dr. Clayton and Alderman Montgomery said the hardest things they could of the Mayor. But it is all over and ordinary citizens as well as politicians are relieved. A clear lethal stream is sweeping all acrimony from the memory and we are dropping back into our old paces, everyone doing his share in the upbuilding of this great city and world port.

THE MORNING AFTER THE NIGHT BEFORE

The morning after the night before-The flowers are dead in the light of morn; We rise with shaking hands to dress And wish that we had ne'er been born.

The morning after the night before-The wine is stale, the laughter fled; We blush with shame as memory stirs The worse than idle things we said.

The morning after the night before-We bid goodbye to the jovial past And swear, with penitential vow, The night before shall be the last.

The morning after the night before-We grasp the lily and spurn the rose; But the night that follows the night before Opens the gate through which penitence flows.
