More Than 1000 German Planes Down in September; Yesterday's Bag 133; Six Fall to Canadians

LONDON, Sept. 28: (CP) — The Air Ministry announces that more than one thousand German planes have been destroyed in attacks on Britain since September 1 and says that "this is the second month in succession in which the figure of one thousand has been exceeded." In their major daylight attack yesterday, the enemy lost 133 war planes while the loss of the Royal Air Force was 34 planes, it was announced officially by the Air Ministry. The Royal Canadian Air Force, led by Squadron Leader Robert McEwen, was responsible for knocking down six German planes over south London yesterday.

Following up daylight attacks on London and air battles, the German Force made the usual night raid on the coast which have long been in dispute and dropping of Japanese territorial aspirations in Outer Mongolia will be Russia's price for quiescence to the new German-Italian-Japanese pact, it is said here.

AS TORPEDO KILLED GREEK PILGRIMS

This photo, showing the explosion of a torpedo against the quay-side at the Greek island of Tenos, was made on the morning of Aug. 15 while Tenos islanders were celebrating the feast of Assumption of the Virgin Mary. The torpedo had been aimed at the Greek cruiser Helle, seen in background, but missed the ship, hit the quay and killed nine pilgrims and wounded 22. Another torpedo fired at the Helle hit a breakwater; the third found its mark on the cruiser which sank one hour and 15 minutes later. Identity of the submarine that fired the torpedoes was never established, but the finger of suspicion points toward Italy.

An American View - - -

"The awe-inspiring courage of the British people could not be sustained if along with their brave hearts they did not also have clear heads. They fight on and they are determined to fight back not in the manner of men resisting blindly but as men who know the position, and the odds, and the real alternative. Only a great people could do this. The British are a great people. They have organized the largest security that the world has known since the Romans and, with all their mistakes, they have extended more widely the area of law and order than it was ever before extended on earth. This great history is in them now and now at last they are greatly led by a man who knows their history; and having the quality of greatness and being greatly led, their reason does not undermine but on the contrary strengthens the courage of their hearts. They see clearly. As long as they see clearly they will not be intimidated or demoralized." That is what Walter Lippman, the well known American journalist says in regard to the present situation.

Mr. Lippman says that the British people know that if they do not resist now they will be helpless forever. This is the great lesson taught by the tragic experience of France. They were poorly led and in June last lost their heads and their courage. They made the terrible mistake of thinking that they could ingratiate themselves with the victors by rendering themselves completely helpless. They surrendered both France and the French Empire. He suggests that what protects France today from suffering the same destruction visited upon the Poles is not German love for France but the power of the British resistance. Most Frenchmen realize this.

The Immediate Question

"The immediate question is whether Hitler can win the Battle of Britain," says Mr. Lippman. "But the greater question is whether, even if he did win it, his victory would be the decisive battle. If it were decisive, then there would fall with the British Isles that control of the seas by means of which free nations have for more than a century maintained their freedom. So the issue is immense, for it is no coincidence, but it is a profoundly significant truth, that the free nations of the world, the nations which have enjoyed and developed a regime of constitutional liberty, are established upon the shores of the ocean: the Scandinavians, the Dutch, the Belgians, the British, the French, and the Americans. In the interior of the continent of Europe where it merges into Asia military power and not naval power is supreme and in the landlocked interior, away from the liberating seas, constitutional government has not taken root and the new practice of liberty works feebly against the ancient habits of tyranny.

"So the control of the seas by the free nations must not be yielded up if freedom itself is to survive. Whatever happens on the continent of Europe, the fleets which control the oceans must remain in being, must remain as the ultimate defense against the universal revolution, as the final counterpoise to the gigantic power of mechanized militarism. This is the conviction of the British people as they face their ordeal, and this has come to be the conviction of the American people and of all their responsible leaders as they watch the struggle on which so much depends. This conviction may be dulled now and then by partisanship and the trivialities of politics. But it will persist and, put to the test, it will prevail."

Reputation Sticks

By H. F. PULLEN

Kitwanoos has the reputation of being the home of hostile natives. As a matter of fact nothing could be farther from the truth. The people of that village are a particularly fine lot. I found them hospitable and anxious to keep to the fore in development. They are religious, industrious and anxious to take their place in the vanguard of civilization. True a few of the middle-aged men cannot read or write but that is because they had no school when they were lads and they were cut off from the rest of the country by the fact that they had no road and getting in and out was difficult. Even yet some of them have to walk the sixteen miles to and from Kitwanoos.

I went in from Kitwanoos with John R. Derrick on a wagon with no springs and no spring seat and the road was the worst I have ever travelled. It took us over five hours to make the trip and, when I arrived at Kitwanoos, sitting down was difficult and unpleasant. However, Chief Peter Williams showed me every hospitality and he had nice soft easy chairs for me to sit on so I was happy once more. I had a long talk with my host, remained with him that night and in the morning, after taking some snapshots of the totem poles and adding two or three new subscribers, rode out on the comparatively soft seat of a Ford truck.

At one time the Kitwanoos natives did not want a road because they feared that, if they had one, they might have people coming along and trying to get their land or their trapping grounds. That is the report of the white people of the district. They certainly want a road now and it was intimated to me that, if they had a road, something like a dozen of them would be buying cars or trucks. As it is, summer traffic to the village is almost cut off as the road is almost impassable and highly dangerous. In winter they use sleighs and get along very well.

The natives of Kitwanoos feel that the valley belongs to them. They have several nice farms there, but have no title except that of being squatters. I strongly urged that steps be taken at once to secure legal titles to the land or they might some day be ousted.

The question of trappers' rights is even more difficult. Several natives of Kitwanoos are planning to trap there this year, claiming that they have, through marriage or potlatch, secured a right to go there. An Indian Department official was there recently and discussed the whole question with them, and according to report, it was found that the present village council is illegally constituted and that other irregularities have been customary at the village, such as the right of inheritance, the tribe having followed the old native custom instead of the provisions of the Indian Act. At any rate there may be trouble brewing unless the matter is taken in hand promptly and the whole difficulty settled by the officials of the Indian Department.

partment. The natives are anxious to do the right thing but they do not seem to have received proper guidance from the Indian agents who were rather inclined to let matters drift instead of tackling what is admitted to be a difficult problem.

Many people think that the route through the Kitwanoos Valley and the Cranberry Valley would be the best possible route for the Alaska Highway. The elevation is not great and the road would lead through the Naas River Valley and tap the Groundhog coal fields. It is quite possible that some day a railway will be built up the valley to the Groundhog anthracite coal fields. In the meantime, the village is a beautiful place with fine totems, an interesting people and great possibilities.

The village council which it is said is illegally constituted because no Indian Agent was present at its election, consists of Chief Councillor Peter Williams and Councillors Alvin Williams, Richard Douse, Fred Good, Walter Douse, Walter Derrick and Lazarus Willets. The village council members are also members of the Anglican Church committee with Richard Douse as chairman and Peter Williams and Walter Douse are also lay readers in the Church. The village is only a small one comprising about 150 souls of whom forty are children, twenty of school age. A few miles beyond the village is a beautiful lake, with a trail leading to it over which a wagon or sleigh can pass.

The future of Kitwanoos will be watched with interest. The valley is pretty sure to come into prominence before long and the greatest care should be taken by all concerned to see that the rights of the natives are protected and that all outstanding problems be settled at as early a date as possible.

VISITS KITWANOOS

KITWANOOS, Sept. 28.—Inspector J. Coleman of the Department of Indian Affairs, accompanied by Indian Agent S. Mallinson of Hazelton and Constable J. H. Ward, R.C.M.P., was here this Tuesday and held a meeting with the native villagers. A number of matters concerning native affairs were under discussion and representations were duly made.

WEATHER MAN FOR 37 YEARS

Sir Frederic Stupart, Noted Canadian Meteorologist, Dies

TORONTO, Sept. 28: (CP)—Sir Frederic Stupart, former director of the Dominion Meteorological Service, died here yesterday at the age of 83 years.

Sir Frederic was one of the pioneers in meteorology. He retired as director of the Meteorological Service in January, 1929, after serving for 34 years as Canada's "weather man." He was 71 years old when he was succeeded by his assistant, J. Patterson, and during his long term of service he saw the science of meteorology grow to be one of the most important branches of government work in the Dominion.

Born near Toronto October 24, 1857, Sir Frederic was educated at a private school and at Upper Canada College. He entered the Canadian meteorological service in 1872, two years after the introduction of the weather map.

For some years prior to the death of Professor Charles Carmichael, Sir Frederic was senior inspector and probability officer of the Toronto Observatory. From 1884 until 1885 he had charge of the chief station in the Hudson Straits in connection with the Canadian expedition for reporting on the navigation in the straits. He was appointed Director of the Meteorological Service in 1894.

Sir Frederic's contributions to meteorological literature form an important contribution to modern knowledge of the Canadian climate and of the character of Canadian winters.

He was a member of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada since its formal organization in 1890 and was its president in 1902 and 1903. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and from 1906 to 1907 was president of the Royal Canadian Institute, of which he was the oldest active member. He was elected a member of the International Meteorological Committee in 1907. He was created Knight Bachelor by King George in 1916 in recognition of his contribution to scientific development in the British Empire.

Sir Frederic kept pace with the growth of meteorology and made notable contribution to the fostering and development of the science. With the coming of aviation and the need for weather charts for air pilots, the work of the Meteorological Office vastly increased and assumed ever greater importance, until it filled a place in public life undreamed of when Sir Frederic first entered the meteorological service.

Sir Frederic entered the meteorological service a few years after the introduction of the weather map—the third great epoch of the study of weather. The first epoch lasted from the dawn of civilization to the discovery of the barometer and thermometer in the seventeenth century. To this period belong most of the weather proverbs, some based on real physical phenomena but most on ignorance and superstition. The second epoch which lasted to about the middle of the last century marked the dawn of the real study of the physics of the atmosphere while the third began about 1870. This was the beginning of modern meteorology.

Forecasting Weather

Sir Frederic thus not only witnessed but was an active participant in the tremendous development that took place in the interval. When the weather maps were first prepared observations were received from six stations extending from Lakes Huron and Erie to Quebec and from fifteen stations in the United States. These maps disclosed the characteristics of violent storms and were immediately used for the purpose of issuing warnings of approaching storms to mariners. Sir Frederic had the honor of issuing the first storm warning message sent out by the Canadian Service. About a month later Charles Carpmel and B. C. Webb issued the first forecast. At that time the charts were new and the area from which observations were obtained were very limited and little was known about the interpretation of the charts.

The problem was to study and investigate these charts and discover their interpretation in order to forecast the weather and issue storm warnings which were primarily for the use of mariners. The investigation developed along two lines: first, by ever widening the area from which observations could be obtained, and second by studying to find out the characteristics and behavior of the various systems disclosed on the charts. This latter has been one of Sir Frederic's greatest contributions to meteorology and the present methods of forecasting and the splendid success achieved therein have been due to his directing genius.

In the course of development he travelled extensively over Canada and attended meteorological conferences in Europe in order to keep the service in a high state of efficiency. The dream of meteorologists for many years and one that still awaits fulfillment is the production of a world weather map. Sir Frederic was one of the leaders in this movement and was the first to make a serious attempt at realizing his dream by producing weather maps for the greater part of the northern hemisphere. For this purpose observations are received daily from a number of stations in Europe, Greenland, Iceland and the Azores, as well as from ships at sea on both the Atlantic and Pacific. This map laid the foundation for forecasts for the North Atlantic for the use of aviators and was a very great contribution to meteorology.

While Sir Frederic's great life work was meteorology, he at the same time made a careful study of the climate of the country and had an unrivalled knowledge of it. He was greatly interested also in the causes of the different types of Canadian winters and believed they depended to a great extent on the temperature of the water in the North Pacific.

Sir Frederic married Marion Dallas in 1886, and two sons and one daughter were born of the union.

Throughout his life Sir Frederic took a keen interest in sports, in boat sailing and yachting chiefly, until he was 56 years old, when he gave up sailing and took up golf.

Rev. J. C. Jackson, pastor of First United Church, returned to the city on Thursday night's train after attending sessions of General Council in Winnipeg. Also attending from this Presbytery were Rev. T. C. Colwell of Port Simpson and Rev. Peter Kelly of Ocean Falls.

Naturally the situation arising out of the war had an important bearing on the business of the council, Mr. Jackson reports. Flashed from London to New York by cable, this photo shows the damage done when German bombs struck a hospital in the British capital. The number of casualties was not immediately known. Last Halibut Boats Will Be In by Middle of Next Week—Alberni Receiving
Annual Overhaul at Dry Dock

With the 1940 halibut fishing season having closed this Thursday night when operations ceased in Area No. 3 at the order of the International Fisheries Commission, some fifteen or so Prince Rupert boats still on the grounds are expected to be in by early next week with their final catches. Wednesday should see all halibut boats accounted for with the possible exception of a few American stragglers. Now that the fishing season is over, however, expectation is that the most of the American boats will proceed straight through to the home port of Seattle without calling here.

Landings during the week ending Friday were rather light at a total of 287,500 pounds of which 72,000 pounds was from Canadian vessels and 215,500 pounds from American. This brought the grand total for the season to date up to 16,318,319 pounds as compared with 15,172,200 pounds at a corresponding date last year. The Canadian total is 6,121,219 pounds in comparison with 6,815,900 pounds at a corresponding date last year while the American total is 10,197,100 pounds as against 8,356,300 pounds a year ago. Prices during the past week have been strong, ranging from 11.8c and 8c to 12.4c and 8c for Canadian fish and from 10.1c and 9c to 12.1c and 9c for American. The top bid of the week for American fish was received by the Prosperity for 30,000 pounds and for Canadian by the Ankar A. for 24,000 pounds.

The lighthouse tender Alberni has been at the local dry dock for the past week for cleaning and painting and will be there for a few days yet. During the past week the Alberni also received her annual inspection at the hands of Albert Farrow, steamboat inspector.

Union steamer Cardena, Capt. John Boden, arrived in port at 11:30 last night from the south, sailing early this morning on her return to Vancouver and way points.

World Series Next Week

CLEVELAND, Sept. 28: (CP)—Detroit Tigers yesterday clinched the American League pennant and qualified to meet Cincinnati Reds in the World Series next week by defeating Cleveland Indians by a score of two to nothing in a pitchers' duel between School Boy Rowe and Bob Feller. More than 45,000 fans watched the game and were not very pleased with the result. The goat was Ben Chapman, Cleveland outfielder, who fanned three times up when hits would have meant runs.

New York Yankees also dropped out of the picture by losing to Philadelphia Athletics.

Boston Red Sox pounded three Washington Senators for twenty-two hits and made the record high score for the season—24 to 4.

ROMANTIC FILM HERE

"Remember?" Is Gay Yet Human
Story Of Modern Married Life

Robert Taylor, Greer Garson and Lew Ayres head the cast of "Remember?" a gay comedy of modern married life which is the feature picture for this afternoon and tonight at the Capitol Theatre. Specially written for the screen, the story is high-lighted with sparkling dialogue and amusing comedy situations although it has a serious and human theme running through it. Briefly, it deals with two young people who fall in love at first sight. Married in haste, their romance is threatened by misunderstandings. Too proud to admit that they are still in love, they are divorced. Then, by a surprising twist of the plot, they get a second chance and this time make the most of it.

Surrounding the stars is an outstanding supporting cast including Billie Burke, Reginald Owen, George Barbier, Henry Travers, Laura Hope Crews, Richard Carle and Sara Haden.
