FRIDAY, JAN. 16, 1942.

Emergency Work . . .

Prince Rupert seems to be quite well equipped for undertaking emergency work. Possibly its A.R.P. training is proving helpful. At any rate during a recent emergency in taking care of American visitors all were placed without any great difficulty. The difficulty seemed to be in a few cases that the boys seemed to think it a great occasion for a spree and a few of those who went out after arranging for sleeping accommodation did not return.

Just One War . . .

The war that is being fought just now between the Axis powers and the Allied powers is just one war although it is being fought in different parts of the world. Some centres have to be sacrificed under the unified command in order that the forces may be so placed as to be of the greatest benefit to the whole.

It became necessary to let Hong Kong go in order that the democracies might concentrate on other more important centres. Moscow had to be saved and it was very desirable that North Africa should be given preference. It was also impossible to weaken the area of the British Isles. The Pacific is getting its turn and should soon be strong enough to resist the enemy successfully.

The war seems to be handled from the one centre, possibly from Washington just now, at any rate from the outstanding group of men on both sides of the Atlantic that has the big influence and the ability to carry on to a successful issue.

Local Japanese Situation . . .

The information in regard to the intention of the Ottawa government is too meagre on which to base any opinion which might be of value. The local opinion seems to be that, while there is no desire to be hard on the Japanese in this country, we cannot afford to take chances. The action of the Ottawa Government has been very slow. We have been at war with Japan for five to six weeks, yet it is only this week that any action regulating Japanese relation to the state has been taken. The government must have had a pretty good idea that there would be war and has had plenty of time to prepare a policy. We think it likely the Japanese would know what to do in a similar case in their country.

Air Raid Protection . . .

We are told that air raid protection wardens are needed. The executive committee is working hard trying to effect an organization that will be helpful in case it is needed. Should enemy planes appear on enemy ships show up off the coast there would be an unorganized rush to help and then people would then be wondering why something had not been done to protect the citizens and the homes. What is needed just now is more air raid wardens and other helpers who will be trained in just what to do in case of an emergency. Those wishing to help in this capacity should get in touch with J. J. Little, H. T. Loek or one other of the officials without delay. This could well be done at a meeting in the Canadian Legion hall tonight.

Canada's War Chiefs

MAJOR GENERAL MAURICE A. POPE
Vice Chief of General Staff

By FRANK FLAHERTY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The newly appointed Canadian vice-chief of the general staff, Maj.-Gen. Maurice A. Pope, is a professional soldier with a civil service background. He knows what makes things tick in the army and also in the widely-ramified governmental services behind the army. In a quiet way he has had a lot to do with making many things tick in the Canadian war effort.

Gen. Pope's recent promotion, announced by Defence Minister Ralston, thus brings to the fore one of the men who before and since the outbreak of war laid plans on which Canada's war machine started to function and then grew with increasing momentum.

General Pope's civil service background comes from the fact that his father, the late Sir Joseph Pope, was a life-long civil servant and from the fact that as an officer at National Defence Headquarters he frequently served as a liaison between the defence and other departments of government.

When Canada entered the war in September, 1939, a lot of things happened in a legal administrative way which many people took for granted but which involved much planning ahead of time. Speedy steps were taken about censorship, internment of enemy aliens and the promulgation of the Defence of Canada Regulations.

Official's Bible

Maurice Pope was the man who had things ready. For a year and a half before the outbreak of war he was practically on leave from the defence department and serving as secretary to six inter-departmental committees which worked away in secrecy. One drafted the Defence of Canada Regulations, one prepared a censorship organization, one looked after aliens and found out who were dangerous and who not and had the machinery ready for dealing with them, another got the shipping situation organized for the outbreak of war, another drew up a plan for air raid precautions and the sixth wrote the government's "War Book."

The "war book" was the government's Bible in those days. They simply turned the pages and read their instructions and went to work accordingly. The authors had thought of everything that needed to be done and laid down a plan for doing it.

If Canada had an hereditary aristocracy Maurice Pope would be in it. His father was private secretary and biographer to Sir John A. Macdonald, the first prime minister, and later the first under-secretary of state for external affairs. His paternal grandfather, William H. Pope of Charlottetown, was one of the Fathers of Confederation. His maternal grandfather was Sir Henri T. Tascheran, chief justice of Quebec and member of one of the oldest and most distinguished French-Canadian families.

War Service

The general was born at Riviere du Loup in 1889 and took an engineering course at McGill University. He was commissioned in the Royal Canadian Engineers in 1915 after two years professional work with the Canadian Pacific Railway and went overseas. He served in France and Belgium from 1916 to the end of the First Great War and won the Military Cross.

On his return from overseas he elected to remain in the permanent force and served in various capacities at headquarters and in the military districts. He went to England for staff courses and when the Second Great War broke out was one of the small group of highly trained army officers at headquarters on whom fell the task of converting the loosely organized, lightly trained Canadian militia into an effective fighting force.

One of Pope's first jobs in the present war was that of director of military operations and intelligence. That made him the defence department representative on the censorship co-ordination committee, plans for which he had drawn up in advance.

His next move was overseas where he became brigadier-general staff at Canadian military headquarters in London and lived through the aerial blitz. There he was the principal liaison between pre-war days and Connaught's jaunt attracted wide attention.

Primarily the duke was a soldier. He entered the military academy at Woolwich when only 16 and served in virtually every branch of Britain's land forces as a junior officer he had a share in the skirmishes which accompanied the 1870 Fenian raid from United States soil into Canada, but his real baptism of fire came in the Egyptian war of 1882. At the decisive battle, the storming of Tel-el-Kebir, he commanded the guards' brigade and Sir Garnet Wolseley, a general who was sparing of praise, reported:

"The Duke of Connaught is well and behaved admirably, leading his brigade to the attack."

Missed Highest Command

The next year he was sent as a major general to India. Later he became lieutenant governor of Bombay and remained in the east until 1890. For the next ten years he held important military posts at home. He was aiming to become commander-in-chief of the army but was passed over twice. Lord Wolseley getting the post in 1895 and Lord Roberts taking it in 1901. The duke succeeded "Bobs" as commander of the forces in Ireland and was in Dublin from 1900 to 1904.

Created a field marshal in 1902, he became first inspector general of the armed forces in 1904 and in 1907 went to Malta as chief of the troops stationed in the Mediterranean area. But he found this post "not active enough" and quit it in 1909 over the objections of King Edward, who recorded that he was "much annoyed at his brother's persistent obstinacy."

The duke returned to England after his years in Canada to plunge into activities connected with the World War. He inspected replacements, visited the western front, especially the "Princess Pats" of the Canadian forces, and helped to establish social centres for men on leave from the trenches.

In the midst of these duties the health of his wife failed. She died March 14, 1917, and observers recorded that thereafter the duke "looked weary and old with service." But he lived on. He had seen his brother crowned king in 1902 and his nephew in 1911, but when the coronation of King George VI came on May 12, 1937, the aged great-uncle of the new monarch was too infirm to attend. "Muscular weakness in the leg" was the official explanation of his affliction.

the Canadian army and the British war office.

During Blitz

A tall, baldish man with rugged features, he has an immense capacity for work and lets nothing interfere with his job, not even a blitz. He stayed at his desk in London during the height of the German attacks, even when bombs smashed the windows and strewn his papers with bits of glass.

Of his overseas experience he says: "The fact that I, with many others, have served a bit overseas puts us well in the picture of the requirements of the army overseas and makes co-operation between headquarters here and the army overseas much smoother." He is a firm believer in the policy of a constant exchange of officers between the army overseas and the army in Canada and also in the closest possible understanding between all responsible officers.

When General Pope returned to Canada as assistant chief of the general staff last March Brigadier J. C. Murchie who succeeded him as director of Military Operations and Intelligence went overseas to step into his shoes again in London. That sort of exchange of posts among men who have worked together and know each other's job is what Pope considers important in securing smooth staff work.

TALKS ON FIRST AID

Speed and Simplicity Advocated By Dr. Hankinson As Prime Requisites in Handling Air Raid Casualties

Urging the advisability of getting started without delay on "Honest to God preparation for disaster should it befall us," Dr. C. H. Hankinson gave an instructive lecture to a large gathering of local first aid workers of the Air Raid Protection and other organizations in the Canadian Legion Hall last night. His discourse was based on the experiences of authorities in handling air raid casualties in Great Britain and contained many concise and useful suggestions as to organization and methods of handling casualties should air raids come to Prince Rupert. Angus Macdonald, local instructor and leader in first aid organization, was in the chair. It was by far the largest turn-out of first aid workers that has ever gathered in this city, once again indicating an increasing response to the local A. R. P. movement now that Prince Rupert has been brought more directly into the vortex of world war and became more liable to attack.

Dr. Hankinson stated that progress was always made at the expense of mistakes. Air raid precautions were a matter of great importance and it would be well to gain such profit as was possible from the experiences of those who had already suffered. Should air raids come to Prince Rupert soon, Dr. Hankinson believed they would doubtless come in the daytime. If the facts were analyzed there was little reason to anticipate that they would come at night.

Discussing methods of organization and treatment for air raid casualties, Dr. Hankinson stated that it had been found in Britain that, according to the number of bombs dropped, casualties were proportionately larger from day than from night raiding. Casualties were greatest in the streets, stores, factories and schools. The percentage of mortality from air raid casualties was 25 percent in the day as compared with ten percent at night. Casualties were due in the main to primary injuries direct from missiles, falling masonry and secondary missiles such as flying glass. The value of shelters was emphasized by the speaker who said they would have been in much more general use in England had it not been for the effectiveness of the Royal Air Force and anti-aircraft measures in fighting off the enemy. Had defences not been so adequate there, the people would have been much more appreciative of the shelters.

Simple and Direct
First aid work in London, Dr. Hankinson said, had been splendid. Simplicity and directness in first aid work were emphasized by the speaker. The first essential was to clear all casualties as rapidly as practicable, in other words, get them into hospital as quickly as possible. Usually straightforward and simple use of bandages and dressings would suffice as far as the first aider was concerned. Only absolutely essential first aid should be resorted to, keeping always in mind the importance of getting the casualty into capable and trained hands for treatment. The doctor warned against the excessive use of the tourniquet and elaborate bandaging. Efficient splinting was often important and there should be night practising of first aid. Hot water bottles were also of considerable importance. Primary objects were to save life, prevent sepsis and avoid deformities.

Dr. Hankinson discussed air raid casualties from the standpoint of medical treatment and hospitalization.

On motion of W. E. Denning a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Dr. Hankinson and, before the meeting closed, Angus Macdonald told of steps that were to be taken to further perfect the local first aid branch of the A. R. P. organization.

Over the radio from London last Sunday Don Blake, formerly of the Canadian National Telegraphs here and on active service overseas for a year or more now, was heard addressing a message of greeting to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Blake of Prince Rupert. Don also spoke on behalf of Donald Norton, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Norton of this city.

Mrs. G. W. Kissick, who has been visiting in the city for the past week with her brother, Capt. Reg Green, sailed last night by the Princess George on return to her home in West Vancouver.

HAMBURG AND EMDEN AGAIN

Follow-Up Raids by Royal Air Force Last Night.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The Royal Air Force staged heavy follow-up raids last night on Hamburg and Emden. Large fires were left burning. There were also attacks on northwest Germany and occupied France. Six planes were lost.

and trained hands for treatment. The doctor warned against the excessive use of the tourniquet and elaborate bandaging. Efficient splinting was often important and there should be night practising of first aid. Hot water bottles were also of considerable importance. Primary objects were to save life, prevent sepsis and avoid deformities.

Dr. Hankinson discussed air raid casualties from the standpoint of medical treatment and hospitalization.

On motion of W. E. Denning a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Dr. Hankinson and, before the meeting closed, Angus Macdonald told of steps that were to be taken to further perfect the local first aid branch of the A. R. P. organization.

BURNS LAKE MEN LEAVE

Several Prominent Residents Are Enlisting—Older Men Would Also Like to Go.

BURNS LAKE, Jan. 16.—Major Reginald Leake Gale, well known on the trails and back roads of central British Columbia, was greeted at Burns Lake by a number of his old-time friends when he visited here in his capacity as recruiting officer. First Great War veterans, be-whiskered prospectors and suspicious looking trappers were seeking an opportunity to enlist in any capacity. Sizing the group of septuagenarians up he remarked, "The whole bunch of you would make a fine machine gun outfit for it's sure none of you could ever run away."

Then he turned his attention to the group of younger locals he had been talking to on his previous visits. Between he and Major Parces and their own determination the following group left for medical examination yesterday:

Sam Marsh, recognized to be one of the safest car drivers in the north. Taylor Jensen, master carpenter. Roy Jewell, mechanic. Earl Pennington and Ernest Moore, mechanics. L. Anderson and John Nelson Raushoff, both of Decker Lake, mechanics, and the pride of the village. Eighteen-year-old Gordon Rush, champion ski runner and auto mechanic, with Dick O'Hara, of the Forestry Department, radio expert, will be accompanied by Dave Gerow, another safe car driver, while Tommy Smith, the local apothecary, is seeking an opportunity to join the navy. Major Gale will leave the Lakes district devastated by the loss of many of its most able men while the local girls will seek to mend a few shattered hearts. The best wishes of all residents of Burns Lake will accompany this small contingent.

PROBLEM OF SPEED OF PLANES

Otto Young Tells of Matter Affecting Men Who Fly in Wartime

At the luncheon of the Prince Rupert Rotary Club yesterday Otto Young gave an interesting talk on aircraft equipment and armament, much of the data being from an article by Lieut. Col. Lockwood in which the latest developments in fighting aircraft were described. Here is an interesting statement made by Mr. Young:

"Fighter planes travel 400 miles per hour of 587 feet per second. Speed of a bullet from a high powered rifle is in the neighborhood of 3000 feet per second which is only about five times that of the plane.

"Planes travelling in opposite directions have speed relative to each other of twice 587. Consequently, one plane intercepting another must aim its guns sufficiently ahead of its opponents that he latter will run into its bullets for now, relatively speaking, the opposing plane is travelling only two and a half times slower than the bullet meant to destroy it. In other words the relative speed of these fighter planes travelling full speed in opposite directions is in the realm of that of the bullets and they merely have to run into something to destroy themselves.

"You can plainly see, therefore, the advantage of fire power under such circumstances. The object seems to be to spray the atmosphere with lead and let the opposing plane run into the shower and destroy itself. This principle has been appreciated by the British from the start and probably explains the superiority of the Allied-planes.

"The discrepancy in the duration of firing ability is only serious when planes are travelling in the same direction, because it is only when one fighter gets on the tail of another that a "burst" from the guns will persist more than a second or so.

"The amazing speed of these fighter planes is perhaps not fully appreciated by those of us who have never been up in one. When fully understood and the time compared with that for the response of human reactions to certain stimuli it is not surprising that extreme care is exercised in the selection and training of personnel of the air force."

Francois Lake Skating Party

Enjoyable Outing Is Featured By Moccasin Dance Which Many Enjoyed.

FRANCOIS LAKE, Jan. 16.—An impromptu skating party was held at Lord's Bay on Tchesinkut Lake Saturday night where splendid ice and music which re-echoed through the heavily timber-clad shoreline lured a large crowd and the event was turned into a moccasin dance.

At midnight the gathering repaired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Lord where Miss Joyce, assisted by Mrs. J. O. Wortendyke of Nanaimo, entertained.

Prominent among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. John R. Walker whose fifty odd years of married life did not prevent them from dancing the most intricate steps, moccasin-clad, on the slick ice. Mr. and Mrs. John Keefe, a comparatively young couple, never missed a dance while the Keefe progeny were more conspicuous on skates. Other disciples of the Lord's were Mrs. Shaffer and Jimmy Catherine and Gerald Cooper, Bill Wiley all the way from Prince Rupert, Elsie and Laws Sugden, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Gair, Don Jean, Patsy, Bob and Ernie Peables, Neil Kelly, John Nestle and Messrs. Gabor and Gezza of Palling, Joe Hawley and all the Lord family.

FRANCOIS LAKE

Mrs. J. O. Wortendyke, who left Nanaimo about the time of the first blackout of the coal city, is visiting at Tchesinkut Lake and has taken such a liking to the district and made such a number of friends that she may remain indefinitely.

Mrs. Walker and Hazel, who visited Mrs. Lillian Gair at Prince Rupert during the new year season, have returned to the home ranch.
