The Plebiscite...

Canada has given its government the go ahead signal in the war effort. Specifically it has freed the government of the shackles in regard to the use of manpower for military service. Inferentially, it has called upon the government to wage total war with all the resources of the nation. The people will expect the course to be plotted accordingly. The government asked for the mandate. Now it has it.

Every province in Canada except Quebec voted overwhelmingly "Yes." The problem of Quebec is not simplified by the three to one "No" vote there. Of course, this was not unexpected. The situation in Quebec for obvious reasons is peculiar. The province is now a definite minority, yet a considerable one. But it must not govern Canada.

As for Prince Rupert we feel it might have done better than two to one affirmative. We give an analysis of the local vote in reporting the returns. Some people may draw conclusions from this.

"The Light That Never Fails"...

Shortly the Canadian Red Cross Society will ask citizens of Canada for nine million dollars to continue the work of the Dominion's greatest voluntary service—work that means so much to the men in the armed forces, prisoners of war, patients in military hospitals, and the people of Britain's bomb devastated cities.

Next week Red Cross canvassers will begin a person-to-person canvass in this district to raise more money to alleviate suffering caused by the world's worst war.

As it spreads throughout the world the work of the Red Cross grows until today there is no field of battle or area of disaster where the Red Cross is not actively engaged in comforting the sick and wounded and feeding and clothing the civilian victims of destruction.

When we talk about the activities and humanitarian functions of the Red Cross we think of that courageous gentlewoman, Florence Nightingale, who years ago on the Crimean battlefield waged a gallant fight to succour the British wounded.

In history books they call her "The Lady of the Lamp" because the suffering soldiers came to recognize her as a symbol of mercy and a harbinger of relief and comfort. A cool hand on a feverish brow; the loosening of a too tight bandage, and a word of encouragement to a dying man made her a saintly person, and the "guardian angel" of the British Army.

But Florence Nightingale did more than that. She lighted a lamp that has never flickered nor gone out down through the years, until today it is known as "The light that never fails" in the relief of suffering in war and peace.

When the Red Cross asks the people of Canada for funds to continue the multitudinous duties of the Society the appeal will not be in vain, for they know what this comforting "lamp" means in a world darkened by destruction and tragedy.

Henny-Penny Folly...

You recall Henny-Penny—that foolish young hen on whose head a rose-leaf fell. Off she sped, calling out to all creatures in the barnyard, "Let's run, the sky is falling." Thus she spread panic and terror.

The story of Henny-Penny is a fable—a rebuke to those of us who go about spreading bad—often false—news. It is a fable bidding all of us of right mind and attitude to be brave and bright and optimistic in these present times when so many among us are saying that the sky is falling—that Heaven is being successfully challenged by Satan and his hosts. Careless, we say, is the Great Avenger, and that Truth is forever on the scaffold and that Wrong is forever on the throne, quite ignoring the glorious fact that:

Behind the dim unknown standeth God
within the shadow,

What is required from each of us is that daily we shall go about radiating confidence in the eventual triumph of Right over Wrong. If individually we retain our faith and confidence in the permanency of Righteousness in the government of this world and in our own integrity then like Job we shall be justified. If Hitler turns us into a Henny-Penny, then so far as we personally are concerned, he has won the war.

Magnificent optimists are our advertisers. Be very sure of this: they are having very difficult times. Even so, they refuse to blackout themselves. Their advertisements in our newspapers are veritable suns—shredders of light and faith. Many of us are reading advertisements today with a new appreciation of their value and purpose. They are as oxygen to us when we feel faint and suffocated.

THE GALS BEHIND THE GUNS

These British girls, members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Force, have been trained as armorers, and part of their duties consist of cleaning and oiling the guns that are mounted on British Royal Air Force fighting planes and bombers. They also do repairs, line sights and repair gun turrets. This bevy of W.A.A.F. armorers is marching out with Browning machine-guns for installation.

SPORT CHAT

SHOWING PICTURES

Managements of professional football clubs throughout England rose as a body in protest against the suggestion of a London sports writer that salaried players have not shown "any special patriotism" and that the "overwhelming majority are on non-combatant service." The article was by Frank Carruthers in the Daily Mail. It noted a ban had been placed on service men travelling during the Eastern period and said "I have no sympathy with clubs who squeal because their players will be absent."

"It is a gross misstatement which does great injustice to a fine body of men," said Fred Howarth, secretary of the Football League, in a statement noting that scores of pro-soccer performers are in the armed forces. They are in anti-aircraft batteries, Royal Air Force stations, on searchlights, in the army, navy and police, and in hundreds of places where they have been and are exposed to danger. It is not their fault if they remain in this country while on duty and many professionals already have lost their lives in active service."

S. F. Rous, league secretary, charged the "inference in the suggestion cannot be substantiated by facts." Manager C. Paynter of the West Ham club said 28 of his players, both professional and amateur joined the territorial army a few months prior to the outbreak of war. "During the heavy raids our lads went through hellish experiences in the course of duty," he added. "There were no soft jobs for them and they didn't want them." Charlton Manager James Seed, member of the Royal Observer Corps, said most of his players also joined the services prior to war's start and "faced all the perils of the severe raids, as police, etc." The Chelsea management said it had 14 players in the army, five in the R.A.F., two in the police and one in the navy, and that many of these were volunteers. At least two others are engaged in war work. Three Arsenal gunners officials said, had been on an expedition to Bruneval in Commandos; two others and the club trainer hold R.A.F. commissions and another is an army captain. Several Blackpool players are in the R.A.F.

Carruthers' article recalled that Col. W. Parkinson, chairman of the Blackpool Club, had protested to the Under-Secretary of State for Air against the ban in declaring that "it penalized those clubs which have been patriotic and whose players have entered the services." Blackpool players in the R.A.F. were not allowed to travel to Manchester for a Cup Tie match during the Easter weekend. Blackpool then withdrew from the competition, forfeiting the home-and-home series to Manchester. "I am not aware that the professional footballer has shown any special patriotism," Carruthers wrote. "The overwhelming majority are on non-combatant service. Why should a few footballers be allowed to leave and thousands of men be compelled to spend the holidays in their camps?"

SEARCHLIGHT MEN LEARN HOW TO HANDLE NAZIS

Picked N.C.O.'s and men from searchlight units in anti-aircraft command in England are now going through special toughening courses organized by their regiments. A "tough" searchlight man is shown, left, taking a headlong dive through a gap in a hedge, with full kit on. This kind of exercise not only toughens the men's muscles, but it gives them confidence in using them. Showing that he was not taken by surprise, a searchlight sentry, right, throws an "enemy" over his shoulder and down a steep piece of cliff.

SPARKLING

"Glamour Boy," With Jackie Cooper, Is Feature Picture at Capitol Wednesday Only

"Glamour Boy," a comedy romance starring Jackie Cooper, is the feature picture on the screen of the Capitol Theatre here for Wednesday only. Susanna Foster, one of the screen's new singing stars shares stellar honors with young Cooper and the supporting cast includes Walter Abel, William Demarest, Ann Gillis, Darryl Hickman, Maude Eburne and Jackie Searle.

Jackie Cooper plays the part of a has-been kid star who endeavours to stage a comeback by coaching a new child actor played by the ten year old Darryl Hickman. Cooper plays some furious studio politics in his fight to get back his big money. In the process he tangles with Jack Searle and managers to get Susanna put out of a big production. Then, when his conscience pricks him and he walks off the movie set to leave his career behind him, fun really starts. The story is said to be closely linked with Cooper's real history.

It is distinctly a young people's picture and is said to offer very refreshing entertainment.

Whifflets
From The Waterfront

Late April sees trolling operations started on the grounds tributary to Prince Rupert although not a great many of the power boats are so far out and the operations of these have been rather badly handicapped by unfavorable weather conditions. However, packing services into Prince Rupert have been instituted with Capt. John Clausen having three camps out—one at Squadrade on Stevens Island, one at Canoe Pass near Warks Canal and the third at Goose Bay on Dundas Island. The Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative has one camp out at Goose Bay, Dundas Island. The Rap I. Capt. Franklin Stewart, and Ada II., Capt. Anton Strand, are packing for Clausen and the Azurite, Capt. Sam Snidal, for the Co-operative. The prevailing price at this time is 15c. for red springs and 8c. for whites.

Two steamers of the Union Steamship line were in port today. The Catala, Capt. Ernest Sheppard arrived at 2 a.m. and sailed at 1:30 this afternoon for Vancouver, on regular schedule.
