The Saturday Evening Post...

A year or so ago they were talking about supposed pro-German and anti-British attitude on the part of the Saturday Evening Post. All that is quite over now with the Post. In fact, it admits now that all would have been lost even for the United States had England fallen.

"It ought to be plain by this time that the centre of gravity of the war is moving toward this continent. Invasion and bombing aside, it is clear that upon our military and industrial strength will depend more and more the fate of freedom in the world—not to mention the independence and existence of the United States of America. Cries of distress emerge from men who only a few short months ago were assuring us that there was nothing to fear from abroad. Former opponents of isolationism go about wringing their hands and bewailing the consequences of the isolation which, but for the courage of Britons, Russians and Chinese, we should now be enjoying."

"Just a few weeks ago there was an excess of optimism in the country, with pundits falling over one another to explain how we ought to use a victorious peace, so now an excess of pessimism appears, and why-doesn't-somebody-do-something alarmist is abroad in the land. Obviously the danger is great; we can lose the war; and if we lose it, we shall lose everything. But this doesn't mean that we are certain or even likely to lose it."

"Before Pearl Harbor, and the inevitable mobilization of U.S. military, naval and industrial power against the Axis, other peoples had been fighting for their liberties and ours. We can never repay our debt of gratitude to the Chinese, who had tied up much of Japan's war potential for five years and still suffer cruelties and hardships from which we are immune. England, after looking wistfully toward isolation at Munich, staged a resistance in the autumn of 1940 which held the "Master Race" at bay. That heroic ordeal, considered hopeless by our fanciest experts, saved England—and us. Even the desperate struggle for survival that we now face would have been decided against us already if England had gone under in 1940."

Standing in line to get into the show might be a very enjoyable way of spending an hour these fine evenings but it won't be so very delightful a short time hence.

Nine Cents a Month...

A Japanese soldier is paid $2.36 a month. He sends $1.89 to his family, 38c is deducted for compulsory savings. He can spend the other nine cents on himself.

Yet the Japanese soldier fights fanatically.

Why?

Because he's fighting for our comfortable way of life, for what we have. He hopes to take Canada; he has been promised Canada.

When he gets through with us, if he wins—well, we've read about Nanking.

We may grumble today but, if we have a Japanese boss, we won't grumble more than once.

Maybe it would be better to cut down the comforts now, save every dollar, put them into Victory Bonds, help the troops to crush the enemy, and get additional satisfaction from a nest-egg saved.

We cannot remain aloof from the war. We are all involved in the final issue. We therefore, must also fight, if only with the dollars that we lend.

Cause For Gratitude

Ernest Brown, Minister of Health, sketching the people's welfare, told the House of Commons that the general position gave cause for "sober gratitude" but added there were certain points however, which needed careful attention.

He didn't specify diseases needing attention, but it was believed he was referring to an increase in tuberculosis and cerebro-spinal meningitis diseases which present special problems during war.

Available statistics show that a total of 1,500 cases of tuberculosis in 1939 rose to nearly 13,000 in 1940 and dropped to 11,000 in 1941. In the first six months of the current year there were 4,000 cases compared with 8,000 and 7,000 in the corresponding periods of 1940 and 1941, respectively.

A similar situation exists with regard to the battle against venereal diseases, said the Ministry of Health, but except for cerebro-spinal meningitis figures for other infectious diseases covering the first seven months of 1942 show a considerable decrease over the corresponding period of 1939. There were no cases of typhoid or paratyphoid fever during 1941 and so far this year cases have been lower than in 1939.

Using daily newspapers, one class has one day a week set aside for oral discussion on current events. Taking turns, the pupils give an oral review to the rest of the class of some article or feature about which they have read and studied the night before.

One former student said the training she gained from her daily perusal of the newspapers during her school years has developed in her a curiosity about world affairs which she believed she would not otherwise have enjoyed.

Death Rate

Sir Jameson Wilson, Chief Medical Officer to the Ministry of Health, giving reassuring figures about the incidence of disease, said that provisional figures showed that the death rate for the June quarter this year would be the lowest for any June quarter except June, 1927, 1930 and 1933 and that the mortality rate would be the lowest for any year except 1940.

Regarding a threatened outbreak of smallpox earlier this year he said Britain has been "very fortunate" in that there were only 41 cases and eight deaths. He added that the smallpox was a virulent eastern type and complicated officials on the way in which the outbreak was handled.

Meanwhile, Prof. V. P. Sydenstricker of Georgia University, conducting an investigation into the nutrition situation at the request of the Ministry, has concluded that the people are not suffering seriously from malnutrition and said he was impressed by the general appearance of well-being and good spirits.

"I see no reason for trouble developing if the foods available are fully utilized," he continued. "The combination of oatmeal and milk is almost perfect and even though the importation of foods should fall off considerably, I think there is enough to get by on without any threat to health."

PAPERS FOR TEXT-BOOKS

Pupils in Alberta's Capital Get New Incentive in Current Events Work

EDMONTON, Oct. 15: (P)—Newspapers are being used in Edmonton's public schools as text-books. School officials described the system as educational and students are intrigued and interested.

Items in the daily newspapers are studied by the pupils practically every day in the current events classes. Teachers clip articles from the papers and use them for discussion.

R. L. Sheppard, superintendent of schools, said: "Educational and valuable information and habits are resulting from the adoption of newspapers in the classroom. In my visits to schools I have seen the daily papers put to every kind of use from scrap books to world events studies."

The only fault some of the parents and teachers had to find with the use of newspapers as a text book was that sometimes the pupils became so interested in their current events work, they had a tendency to neglect other subjects.

Real Old Timer Of Pr. Rupert

Harry Thrupp Was Here When Community Was Young Back In 1908

Speaking reminiscingly this morning, Harry Thrupp, whose transfer from here to Edmonton in the service of the freight department of the Canadian National Railways, recalled the very early days of Prince Rupert back in 1908 when he was with the railway construction firm of Foley, Welch & Stewart for a time. Thrupp came here in the old steamer Henriette and lived at the old Premier Hotel. Later he went back to Vancouver where he was with the freight service of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The end of the First Great War, in which he served in France, saw Mr. Thrupp in Prince Rupert and he has been here almost ever since. Many old friends will regret his departure while, of course, congratulating him on a well earned promotion.

LAIDS HAVE TO RELAX

It's a Swift Life in Line of Duty
For Men on Corvettes

By FRANK LOWE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

HALIFAX, Oct. 15 (C) — Danger lurks behind every wave that slaps the hulls of an Atlantic convoy, but the men of the Royal Canadian Navy corvettes find time to relax.

Not that they relax their vigilance, that would be fatal, but they realize tired minds and bodies must be given a rest, so they do their best to find a amusement within the limited confines of their tiny fighting craft.

Many hours of free time are whiled away merely by relaxing in the sun and spinning salty dips — tall tales—or by gathering in the mess decks for cut-throat games of cribbage, solitaire or a little illicit poker. Others read mostly paper-backed novels of adventure on the high seas penned by writers who never smelt even a salty breeze though a few go in for the really deep stuff.

Two I stumbled on the decks of one corvette while on a two-way Atlantic crossing were of that type. One was reading Plato's New Republic while the other was buried in the pages of a tome about ethics.

Have Everything

But one Royal Canadian Navy corvette had the jump on all the others. There all hands were wakened by a catchy tune played by one of America's leading swing bands and throughout the day spent their free hours listening to trumpets blare or saxophones gurgle.

A public address system, bought by the men of the ship, was their answer to the amusement question—that and a phonograph machine and a batch of records. And music wasn't the only things that came over the P.A. system to amuse the troops. It was station "BLAH" over which quiz programs, spelling bees and old time fiddlin' contests were held and broadcast to every part of the ship.

High light of my time in this ship was a spelling bee they held. Gathered in the "Asdic" cabin around the improvised mike the sailors chosen to defend the education honor of the various trades aboard were put through their paces by master of ceremonies Duncan Wallace of Easterhazy, Sask.

Spelling Bee

Rapidly he fired words at them—real twisters chosen by Cliff "Red" Aiken of Toronto, sick bay assistant—and made entertaining remarks for the rest of the crew, as they fumbled a tough one.

Everyone was listening, including the officers. They were gathered in the wardroom and were attempting to spell along with the contestants and not having much luck.

Winner of the brain and tongue racking contest was Charlie Gougen of Saint John, N.B., who ran through the list like a college peta—whoops—pedagogue. Runner up was Petty Officer Pete Cox of Vancouver while others taking part were Ken Medford of Montreal, Art Myers of Yorkton, Sask., and Bob Young, Toronto.

"Orchestra Wives" Stars Glenn Miller with Movie Folk

"Orchestra Wives," an hilarious musical, comes to the Capitol Theatre this week-end.

The picture stars Glenn Miller and his talented crew of instrumentalists and vocalists featuring George Montgomery, a handsome trumpet player. Co-starred with Miller and Montgomery is Ann Rutherford, an orchestra wife who almost becomes a brass widow.

Mack Gordon and Harry Warren have written for the picture such songs as "I Got a Gal in Kalamazoo," "People Like You and Me," "At Last" and "Serenade in Blue."

Lynn Bari sings with the band. On hand, too, is Cesar Romero. Carole Landis, Virginia Gilmore and Mary Beth Hughes also take part.

"Orchestra Wives" tells the story of the trials and sorrows of the wives of the orchestra men when the band is on the road and it presents an intimate picture of the life of such a band on tour.

Resources Department Eager For Stories of Good Catches in National Parks

OTTAWA, Oct. 15 (C) — The tragic picture of a fisherman looking for someone to tell about his successes and the one that got away should no longer sadden the Canadian national parks.

Mines and Resources Department officials draw attention to their eagerness to hear all about what the fisherman did and what he caught—or did not catch. They are ready and willing to listen to all he has to say, including his suggestions for improvement of the kind of fish and the best way to catch them.

Fishermen distressed by the unappreciative audiences who think nothing of the strain involved in indicating the size of the fish they hooked and lost, will find nothing but sympathy and understanding. For their convenience, the department has sent special cards to six national parks in western Canada with an invitation to fishermen to fill them out.

The fishermen are asked to provide this information as part of the national parks' program to maintain and improve the fishing facilities in these areas. When the fisherman fills in a creel census card he gives the department information as to the number of fish he took and their size and species. He described, too, the lure he used and the conditions under which they were caught.

He may report utter failure in a day's fishing, and he may recommend that some other type of fish be introduced to the river or lake where he made his quest. Whatever he has to say is read with avid interest by fish culture experts who know what to do about it. The fisherman can obtain the cards at hotels, post offices and stores selling fishing tackle.
