Right Hon. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, reporting on his visit to Moscow, said the meeting with Stalin and other Russian leaders had been of the utmost importance. Not only had war problems been discussed but after war problems had occupied their attention. Questions of peace and security were discussed and the Russian leaders gave their opinion that there was not one Russian Quisling in the country.

Naturally Mr. Eden was unable man. to make public any matters that HUGE CROWD might be of value to the enemy. The main idea was that the four countries. Russia. Britain. United States and China were in full accord in matters of policy.

REOCCUPYING RUSSIA

LONDON, Jan. 5:-The Russian forces are still making good progress. Yesterday M. Maisky said that preparations were being made for a much more strenuous offensive against the retreating Germans. In the meantime bridges had to be rebuilt, accommodations prepared for the re-occupying Russians, especially in those areas where the scorched earth policy of the Russians had been followed out when they were first driven out. He said it was surprising how quickly this work was carried out, especially the bridge building.

GERMANS POORLY CLAD

MOSCOW, Jan. 5:-German prisoners taken at the week end are poorly dressed, the material used being thin and of poor quality. They had no gloves and were suffering severely from the cold.

MOSCOW-During the conference of the British delegation, the visitors were told that the British goods supplied to their Russian allies were all of excellent material and served the purpose well. This was true of the tanks, tents and planes.

FINLAND FOR PEACE

LONDON, Jan. 5: -The Helsinki newspaper Suomen Sosialdemokratti said this morning that the present time "seems suitable opportunity to break off military operations" against Russia, Reuters News Agency reported. Referring to Field Marshall Mannerheim's November statement that Finland's strategic goal is almost reached, the newspaper said that the goal appeared now to have been achieved as several important towns have been occupied since that time.

In Moscow as Well . . .

Simultaneously with the departure of Mr. Churchill from Washington for Ottawa, says an exchange, came the news from London that Rt. Hon. While it had been obvious that the object of Mr. Churchill's visit to Washington was to obtain a complete pital. understanding between all the nations fighting the Axis. some speculation had manifested itself as to the part Soviet Russia was to play in the establishment of a practical common front, or, to use the official British description, in the creation of an "identity of view" that would dovetail into the grand strategy essential to wage effectively this war of the continents. Any misgivings which may have been entertained on this point, however, have now vanished; and the fact that Mr. Eden was entrusted Roy Wesley. with the Moscow end of the Allied deliberations furnishes adequate evidence—if such were necessary at this Cora Wesley. stage—that closer political and military collaboration Rena Wesley and school. between Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. is now a potent Recitation, "What Shall I Be," instrument of British national policy. British Designers Include Polish Boots in Their Ensembles

Written for The Canadian Press By ALISON SETTLE

tional city in the world. Set in its heart are the governments of many nations, and on its streets, wearing the uniforms of innumerable countries, walk sailors, airmen and soldiers. The women of the French army in their excellent khaki uniforms and the Polish armies. There are, too, designers, artists and craftsmen of every kind ,among them the dress designers of many countries, whose international point of view colors

There is Bianca Mosca, best known of the internationalists in dress, whose recent collections have inspired women to greater Miss Maureen McDiarmid, Miss elegance despite coupons and econworks in what formerly was the house of the Princess Royal, facing down Park Lane.

Nation-Mixed Ideas

Mme. Pryzworksa says she finds "tremendous inspiration" in the mixture of British and Polish ideas, for both, she says, are mutually sympathetic. "Designing today is an entirely different affair from designing at any other period," she said.

"When a woman had a car waiting for her, heated rooms to come from and go to, then the oddity of a voluminous fur coat and below it spindly legs in silk stockings did not appear extraordinary. The bride, who was given in Now it does. Silk stockings have became rarities, and have to be cherished.

> "So now, when I design clothes, I also make leggings or bootsmountain boots such as the Polish highlanders wore in white feltbut in darker waterproof cloths, strapped with three elegant but practical straps."

Mme. Pryzworska makes hats sive ceremony in the presence of for her clothes as well. She believes that in a country where every woman must be working, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bus- blocked and solid hats which need boxes in which to travel and atcloakrooms to care for them, are wrong in all respects.

Crush Hats

So the hats she makes are "pliables.' They can be taken off, crushed in the hand, thrust into a pocket, or put on without a mirror. She makes them of tweed and of knitwear, but also goes to the antique stores and collects old Victorianism of cross stitch—the curates unworn slippers, tea cozies, bellpulls—and reshapes these into LONDON, Jan. 5: (P)-Food pros- fez shapes, high on the head. She adds to them knit, crochet or fabric "curtains' which cover up the hair at the back and protect the ears on cold days. Angele Delanghe's greatest love is the soft suit made in tweed. Her clientele, she says, asks for rosy tweeds more than any other, but also likes to have in hand one moire dress. She uses diagonal cut for such dresses and bows diagonally placed and never lets skirts be straight even though they are slim. These skirt-length moire silk dresses are most popular for weddings and as dinner dresses.

Dr. R. G. Large and Party Back Today From Trip to Former Smelter Town.

Dr. R. G. Large and party returned to port late this morning from a trip to Anyox aboard the power yacht Soogwilis. The trip was made primarily for the purmaterial in the old recreation hall and gymnasium at the ghost smelter town might be of any use to the local community centre project. It was found that there was nothing left there that would be of much use in the Prince Rupert undertaking.

The party left here Friday evening and the Soogwilis ran into quite a dusting-bucking a northeast wind off the mouth of the Naas River northbound. Saturday night was cold at Anyox and ice had to be broken for about a quarter of a mile coming out of Woman Appealed to Prime Minister for War Workers' Transport and Got It.

TREDEGAR, Wales, Jan. 5: (0-Mrs. William Wilson believes that if you want something done in a hurry the thing to do is write the prime minister.

Mrs. Wilson was worried because her husband and other workers at an important war factory had frequently to wait for long periods after their work for transport. In some cases she found the inconveniences were causing unjustified domestic strife in homes where previously it was unknown.

She complained to the prime minister and within a few days she had an answer from No. 19 Downing street that her letter was being forwarded to the appropriate department.

Sailor Tells of How Navy League Ditty Bags Were Received on Ship at Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, Jan. 5 - The ship was very quiet on Christmas Day as it lay at the dock here. went ashore on business and came back in the evening. The air was icy cold, the launch flung herself forwards over the waves. The evening sky, a paeon of blue and grey and black, was illuminated with stars. There was a smell of snow in the air. We reached the ship. A lantern hung like a beacon over the ladder as we climbed up. The gangway watchman had a grin you could stick a shovel in, across his wide face. "Hey, Frankie, look at your bunk." Nothing niore. I got across the iron frozen deck to the saloon. Inside was warmth, cigarette smoke, and laughter. The noise was deafenng, the floor a chaos of paper. On every bunk or seat was a ditty | bag. I looked. A huge sweater, what Chocolates, sweets, a first aid set. The person who thought of that alone was a genius. A mouth organ, writing pad, a lovely razor set, soap, matches. Tobacco for dad ,cigarettes for me. A mysterious tin-Xmas pudding! then some cocoa, just the thing for a cold night on watch. And underneath a letter, faintly scented, saying "Merry Xmas, sailor boy. Please write." Signed "The Girls in the Curtain Department" and four names—and four kisses. Almost in Tears.

I looked up as the cabin boy, wearing an enormous brand new scarf, handed me a mug of tea. He was almost in tears for he was only 15. "Frank, look what I've got. Just what I want to see if there is dust under the bunks." Strapped forever to his waist was the biggest and shiniest new torch I've ever seen. Everyone of us had a ditty bag. Everyone on board the ship was remembered Kind hands all over Canada had knitted to keep us warm. Brains had worked over the problem of what we would like best and solved the problem beautifully.
