Above is shown one of the smallest H.M. ships ever to cross the Atlantic. She is a Nova Scotian built minesweeper and is pictured here as she passes a tow-line to a disabled sister ship during a mid-Atlantic gale. Shortly after leaving Canada, these little ships were caught in the tail end of what was known as "the Halifax Hurricane" and throughout their 3,300-mile trip across the Atlantic, encountered some of the worst weather experienced this year. But they arrived safely in a British port.
