Labor and Business . . .

One of the conditions essential to success in business is triendly co-operation in relations between employees and employees. Where there is distrust, either on one side or the other, antagonism and discontent inevitably ensue. Unhappily, we still have with us some employers who look upon labor merely as a United States Troupe Puts on chattel to be bought or sold. However, the modernminded employer appreciates keenly his responsibilities in relation to the welfare and prosperity of those who work for him. He understands, too, that a higher standard of living for all Canadians means more prosperity and an improvement in business generally.

"Unfortunately," we read in a brief submitted to of advice-be calm-be cour- Ten Day Leave" who went to Park they slugged out an easy the National War Labor Board by the Toronto Board of Trade "many workers are under the impression that the only way to negotiate with the employer is at the point of a gun and that, with strong measures, the visiting concert party put Then came the real McCoy, which no pitcher at present has the employer is unable to dominate the employee." The brief adds that a trade union may, at times, obtain extreme concessions through threats but that, in the long run, the abnormal situation is corrected. . Temporary advantages disappear but there is widespread suffering from the excesses committed.

The need of a kind of association between employers and employees becomes more and more evident. The latter can become the partners of the former and that would appear to be in the interests of _consists of three men and of wizard. Another dance by both. Painful but True ...

It is not necessary to be a very close observer for the fact to become apparent that too many people no on the accordion and sings and mimic character sketches that longer are interested in saving. Wages, higher than ever, are spent without thought for the future.

The phenomenon leads to the conclusion that too many people now count entirely upon the government to keep them.

Can they be blamed?

If you question many a wage-earner, reproach him for over-spending, all he replies is:

F. with the same determination and courage which gained him more than 300 victories in his fistic careen Never knocked out in the ring, Foreman hopes to knock down enemy planes with the same cool effectiveness which crashed more than 200 adversaries to the canvas.

The stocky little lightweight holder of the world's record for one-round knockouts and conqueror of three world's champions in overweight contests has trained for his chance to fight Fritz just as keenly as he would for a title bout. He reduced 20 pounds to make sure he was at peak physical condition for his air crew examination. He passed all tests with honors, "We have high regard for Foreman's qualifications as an air gunner," said the chairman of the aircrew selection board at Lachine.

When the age limit was raised, Foreman set out to get in shape. Bundled in heavy sweaters, he did his roadwork along the paths of Rockcliffe, punched the bag, and sparred with R. C. A. F. pals until rumor went around the camp that he intended to "make a comeback" So' he did, but it wasn't in the ring. It was in the gun turret of an R. C. A. F. bomber in the vent before the medical board he had reduced his weight from 153 rounds to 133, just six pounds heavier than his best fighting weight.

Never the playboy type of fighter, Al. Foreman earned more than $500,000 in the ring. He didn't develop his footwork in night clubs, like other popular fighters of his day. He didn't like night clubs, for the smoke hurt his eyes. In training he took nothing stronger than an occasional sherry and bitters. "They'll never have to hold any benefits for me," he said. "The money came easily-I got $11,000 for a fight with which lasted just 29 secs .- but I tried not to let it go the same

In 1929, at Montreal he knocked out Johnny Duntee after Dundee had given up the world's junior lightweight title. One of the greatest junior lightweights of all time, Dundee was put away only twice in his whole ring career.

> Foreman won the Canadian title from Leo "Kid" Roy in October, 1928 putting away the champion in two rounds before the biggest fight crowd in Montreal history. Foreman never quarrelled about weight. He would fight welterweights as readily as feathers and lightweights. Among the Canadian boxers he defeated were George Chabot, Bobby Allen of Vancouver, Tommy Bland, Sammy Hackett, and Tommy Mitchell of Toronto. He knocked out Hackett with three punches and Tommy Mitchell, one of the most promising of the Canadian crop, never boxed again after his fight with Foreman Bobby Blay, welter champion of Australia, was another who never fought again after assorbing a 15 -round beating from
