The Battle of Fuel ...

The problem of fuel economy facing Canadians his winter is one which, even in more acute form, ras met sensibly and courageously two years ago by he people of Britain and, by their voluntary efforts, onquered.

In 1941, after two years of war Britain, with her vigorous industrial activity and large population, began to find herself short of fuel. It was a shortage more acute than we in Canada have begun to feel after four years of war demands for in England, no matter in what form fuel is burned, whether as coke, gas, or electricity, it derives from coal. Here in Canada we have hydro power and, for limited domestic use, wood and sawdust, but in England there was only coal. It was plain that something must be done.

What may be called with some justification the burning question of fuel economy arose in the fall of 1941 when the Secretary for Mines addressed a letter to all civic heads in the country asking for their co-operation in a fuel saving campaign. The fuel interests offered their whole-hearted support to the campaign which was put over to the country by newspaper advertising by the Mines Department and by a considerable amount of supporting propaganda by the gas and electricity industries.

This campaign did valuable work in preparing the ground for the bigger publicity efforts that were to follow but it fell so far short of achieving its objective that in March, 1942, the government announced its intention to ration all fuels and Sir William Beveridge was asked to prepare the draft of a rationing scheme.

Sir William's main proposals were that all fuels should be rationed together on a points system with interchangeable coupons and he produced the now famous "Fuel Target" by which householders could work out their ration.

The publication of the scheme was followed by a House of Commons debate which showed that Sir William Beveridge's campaign had many critics. In the face of all this criticism the government postoned the introduction of compulsory rationing pendng the results of a voluntary economy campaign.

This voluntary campaign, or "Battle for Fuel" as t was called, was based on the Beveridge "target." This new voluntary target varied according to the number of rooms in the house and the number of occupants and a higher fuel allowance was given to certain parts of the country on account of climatic variations. Householders were asked to keep their usage of fuel over the year within the target or. if this were impossible to accomplish without considerable hardship, to cut their fuel consumption by a large percentage.

An extensive publicity campaign set the pace for the "Battle for Fuel" and lavish advertising was employed.

Economy talks were given in schools and the students were presented with models of meter reading dials, and fuel saving hints for instructional nurposes. Children were also ecouraged to become "Fuel;

Watchers" at home. In industry Regional Fuel Efficiency committees were set up which arranged free lectures and training courses for managements and boilerhouse operatives. All industrial concerns were asked to appoint "Fuel Watchers" to watch out for fuel waste and promote fuel economies. The general success of campaign in the winter of 1942-43 can be guaged by the fact that the country actually saved more fuel than would have been needed to honor the coupons under the contemplated compulsory rationing scheme. While the figures and percentages would be dull, an interesting example can be shown in the record of one English town. Guildford, a town of between 30,000 and 40,000 inhabitants in Surrey, was the first municipality to organize a local fuel saving drive. The minister of fuel visited the town and onened a fuel saving exhibition in August, 1942. Guildford's fuel savings have been estimated on the amount of fuel entering the town each month, the decrease over the corresponding month of the previous year being prominently displayed on an indicator in the centre of the town. The saving to date has reached 19 per cent, a record of which Guildford is justly proud.

With the return of winter, Britain is entering her second Battle for Fuel, while Canada is heginning her first. Britain will continue her fuel-saving habits until the final hattle hrings victory and the people of Canada will find that they must do the same

Allied Air Forces Drive Germans To Defence Tactics.

By ALAN RANDAL

Canadian Press Staff Writer LONDON, Oct. 14 (P) - You don't have to go any further than the men who man the big night bombers to get the answer to the question of what has become of the German air force. The bomber men say the to supply for the coming month German air force has been turned almost entirely to defence, particularly in increasing use of night fighters.

Captain Armitage always has some sort of a surprise up his sleeve. Besides being a magician, a vetriloguist and delving in hypnotism he also has an aunt who writes verse. It came about this way, he was rummaging through our library and ran across a school text book called The Voice of Canada" which lound a very levely one written by his first cousin, Annie C. director. Dalton. Mrs. Dalton has two books of verse to her name "The Marriage of Music" and Frame and Adventurer." I have taken a few verses from her poem called

INCANTATIONS

For I have loved you so; And now beneath your branches, for the winter.

pray for you to grow.

If I should pray For you each day,

Would not your sorrow heal? or flowers and trees, the wis men say,

Can hear and see and feel.

Then hear my prayer-A spring so fai!

With all those branches stark and bare,

That were so beautiful.

O wilful tree,

Come back to me! 'Tis dark where you would go, Even now beneath lorn branches.

I pray for you to grow,

Concerning his cousin captain left me the following note: "F. G. A. browsing through the books at the Red Triangle Club, same across one of his cousin's poems 'Incantations' by the late Annie Charlotte Dalton, M.B.E., of Vancouver, B.C. F. G. A. remarked that his cousinalmost totally deaf-could hear the works of nature when others, more gifted in hearing, would be oblivious to their surround-

Which makes me think of the many times I have watched a deaf child at play and thought as I watched his sweet smile and the look of peace upon his face that he must hear the voice of God although mine was denied him.
