Britain Shows the Way

While the "sound" financiers of Canada's government move slowly and cautiously, the Labor government of Britain proceeds boldly to bring tax relief to the people of the hard-pressed Mother Land. The latest budget of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Dalton, announces the reduction or removal altogether of income tax from many people in the lower brackets and further cuts the excess profits tax, intimating that its complete removal may be expected before long.

Of course, we may be told that this tax relief for Britain is being made possible through the financial assistance she is receiving or expects to get from United States and to a lesser extent from Canada. That may be true but, nevertheless, the fact remains that a measure of relief is being brought to the people who, after all, are more interested in seeing that things are done than introspecting into how they are accomplished.

Canada will soon be getting its budget brought down and there is already keen speculation in what, if any, measure of tax relief may be in store for us now the war is over. It is reasonable to remind ourselves that, even if we may have felt at some times that we were badly done by, we have never borne the burden of taxation these many years on anything like the scale the people of Britain have been called upon to do and have patiently done.

LONDON (P) - Stories about servicemen suffering melancholia after demobilization are "nonsense," says a medical officer who has examined thousands of British soldiers before their discharge.

"Folks at home can safely ignore all those misguided writers who would have them treat demobbed soldiers as though they were extreme mental or psychopathic cases," he said.

"If families find that now and then a returned serviceman gets a bit moody, there is no need to indulge in any amateur psychiatry. It's only that down-inthe-dumps feeling he used to get before he joined the army. It will soon pass over."

Smuggling Flowers Boom in Antipodes

SYDNEY, Australia ()-Smuggling tactics are being used to get large quantities of protected Australian wildflowers on to the Sydney market, according to Kuringai-Chase Chief Ranger V.

Kuringai-Chase is a vast, natsays the smugglers have assembly depots in obscure caves along the rocky river banks. Boatmen rendezvous to pick up these cargoes at night and slip down the broad river to less conspicuous dispersal points.

Wallace says it is becoming a big business and has practically denuded some parts of the Chase of wildflowers.
