a more striking incident of united expression of indignation here and certainly we can recall no previous equal example of speedy and favorable response to the determined voice of aroused public opinion.

Nor will here be any less appreciation of the concession that is made just because we had to get up on our hind legs and show that we meant business when we felt an attempt was made to deprive us of what we had been promised in binding undertaking. No doubt if we had not expressed ourselves as emphatically and effectively as we did the thing would have been accomplished. Fortunately, the rights of our claim were appreciated upon due consideration.

Now that we have seen what is possible when we all get together in pulling for our fair and just dues, we should be heartened for other efforts which we might have to make on behalf of causes of importance to the community equal to that of the civic centre.

We should have learned by now through the many lean years the willing to accept at this time. That is something we would do well to think about.

Greatest Assets

One of the greatest assets of any nation is the intelligence, initiative and industry of its people. The obviously progressive course is to encourage in every possible way those who have these qualities to such an exceptional degree that they are able to contribute substantially to the welfare of the nation as a whole.

If special ability is penalized to the point where incentive is destroyed, or the possessors of that ability are forced to seek employment beyond our borders, we embark on a shortsighted policy which will retard prosperity and will drastically hamper our national development. It is upon the brains, knowledge and energy of this group that a country must largely depend for the measure of its success in converting natural resources into national income.

Expansion of our tourist traffic will prove invaluable to the post-war development of our country, but it should be accompanied by a great increase in travel between Canadians themselves.

For a more closely-knit unity, more friendly understanding between all sections of Canada, there's nothing like the meeting and mixing of the people of our nine provinces.

Canada has variety of climates and scenic beauty, traditions of courtesy. and hospitality to equal any nation on earth. They should be better known to visitors and Canadians alike.
