A verdict attaching no blame to anyone for the death of Alexander Milton Bell, Queen Charlotte Islands logger, who died in hospital here on January 15 was G. Murray, foreman, W. The jury found that Bell died of meningitis of the brain and pneumonia resulting from a skull fracture caused by a series of heavy falls on January 5 and 6 while he was a passenger to Prince Rupert on board the steamship Catala.

The verdict was brought in after the jury heard evidence last night by Dr. W. S. Kergin and five loggers who had travelled to Prince Rupert with Bell shortly after the New Year.

Dr. Kergin testified that h had treated Bell for a head wound on the night of January 6 but had found no trace of infection or brain damage. The wound, at the base of Bell's skull, appeared to have been from two and a half to six days old and showed signs of having been broken oven more recently CHUNGKING (P) - Emergence China's millions from civil strife into a day of full freedom for all political parties was viewed yesterday by President Chiang Kai-Shek as the possible foreshadowing of the end of his leadership.

The man, whose one party rule has continued for eighteen years, said frankly that from now on the heavy task of rebuilding the country rested not alone on the Kuomintang (Nationalist Party) and "much less on me as an individual." He also told a political consultation conference with other parties that he will work sincerely for peace and solidarity.

Law and Nations

As the Nuernberg trials continne, it is natural that day-to-day evidence should focus on the grim and depraved record of Nazidom's arch-criminals. But when history has forgotten even the names of the flagitious defendants, it will recall that in these days there were established new concepts of the common law among nations.

For we are in a period which parallels much in the development of the common law as it defines the rights, offenses, and duties of individuals.

At Nuernberg we are applying to the conduct of nations the same logic which established internal common law. Lord Wensdale in a now classic definition spoke of the common law as "a system which consisted in applying to new combinations of circumstances those rules which we derive from legal principles and judicial precedents."

And Mr. Justice Jackson, in his opening statement to the War Crimes Tribunal, conceding that although there was no precise legal precedent for the tribunal, declared that "international law grows, like common law, through decisions reached from time to time in adapting settled principles to new situations."

It is important to make clear that legal precedents do, in fact, exist for the prosecutions at Nuremberg. But SEA CADETS it is even more important that these precedents be given the sanction of DOING WELL law itself.

Likewise the observant world has no use for professing Christians who do not express their profession by a Christ-like life. We may know our Bibles, be familiar with and be loyal to the discipline of our special religious organization but Christianity is not Biblical or religious knowledge although largely based upon them. Christianity is a definite and peculiar life which always and only reveals the indwelling spirit of God. As Jesus, through His manhood, revealed the nature and love of God so we through our Redeemed personalities must reveal the Christ to the world in which we live.
