THRASHING HUNS

NAPLES, May 23 (CP)—While the German radio admitted the loss of Pico, stronghold in the centre of the Hitler Line, and Cairo reported that advance forces of the Allies were only fourteen miles from the Anzio beachhead, headquarters announced today new gains against stiffened enemy resistance in southern Italy. The Nazis have bolstered their defences by rushing reinforcements to threatened points. The Allied gains are small in amount of ground covered but by the Canadians and British Valley.

At London Minister of Information Brendan Bracken said that the fighting in Italy is beyond all description and the Germans are receiving one of the greatest "thrashings" in history.

A German communique reported strong Allied attacks in the Anzio beachhead area closest to Allied troops advancing from the south.

Douglas Amaron, Canadian Press war correspondent, said that Canadian infantry advanced through strong defences to positions controlling the southern end of the Pontecorvo-Aquino road.

Miss Jean Hall, executive of the Program Department, National Council Y.W.C.A. says.

"The majority of girls consider marriage and motherhood a career," said Miss Hall, "requiring Will Be Modern the same education and training as any other career. They have no desire to just drift into it when they tire of their jobs."

Most unmarried women Miss Hall talked to thought that after the war married women should return to their homes. As well as feeling that if married women continued to work they might threaten their security, single girls believed paid workers could not take the place of a mother in a child's life.

The British Empire . . .

Many people in many lands, including citizens of the Empire themselves, have been puzzled by the question: "What is the British Empire?" but those outside worry more about its status than do those inside, says the Royal Bank monthly letter. Empire people take it for granted that they belong to strange complex agglomeration of states which has "just growed," and they shrug off casually the absence of contract or constitution.

This association of members has not pooled its possessions, it has no central management, no uniform system of money, no Empire bank, and no consolidated public debt. Its diversity of race, language, creed, custom, interest and outlook present at first glance a phenomenon verging upon the impossible. It has many kinds of riches: natural, developed and accumulated. Its hundreds of nations display every form, degree and age of human civilization and cul-

People who have designated the British Empire as a unique family system of freely associated states, equal in status though not in stature, have not been far wrong. It has many characteristics of a family. Nations, after all, are composed of groups of human beings, and the characteristics of nations are akin to those of human beings. They are often dissatisfied with one another, but if anyone outside ventures on criticism of the family he finds that the quarrels are purely domestic. Family relationship is not a chance group of individuals; a family cannot be made by contract or convention or constitution, nor can family be unmade by mere agreement. It is true 10:05-Recorded Interlude that members of a family grow up and become able 10:15—Show Time. to shape the destinies of their own lives; and that is 11:00-Closing announcement just what has occurred to many members of the British Empire family. But the family ties are still there, and they are all the stronger, perhaps, for being seen less in mature life. This relation of the members of the Empire to one another is not a mere 8:45 Novelty Tunes analogy but a living reality, and this part at least of the Empire story is easily understood. Settlers from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland went to new lands, carrying with them certain common ideals, ideas, traditions and loyalties. These are the 10:15-Kenny Baker things which make up the character of a people.

How did the Empire reach a stage where there has been such a rallying of diverse and powerful nations behind a decision of the United Kingdom, 11:45 Reginald Foort which seemed to await invasion and destruction at a dictator's whim? It was not by any route followed by great empires of the past. The British Empire of 12:30-Spotlight Bands today is the outcome of evolution, and has developed 12:45 CBC News great capacity to absorb shocks. Such an Empire could not be created by logic or planning, but only by a living political organism, capable of adapting itself to circumstances and possessing the flexibility needed for survival.

Footballers were only just getting out of the long-trousers stage when Sir Frederick's reign began. They turned out looking much like cricketers in white "longs." Teams carried their own referees and usually the most important part of the game took place before the start-deciding which team's referee was to officiate. Sir Frederick cleaned up that situation by forming the Referees' Association. Handling of all matches then was placed on an impartial basis. Tall and upright and for many t years affecting a brightly-polished topper, Sir Frederick always had time for any true seeker of football information and advice. Anyone with a problem was told to "go and see Wall." When Sir Frederick became secretary the assets of the F.A. were but a few thousand dollars. Today' balance sheet shows $540,000.

Needless to say, every tea consumer in Canada will welcome the increase in the TEA ration and will lose no time in resuming some of the pleasant habits he was wont to enjoy in pre-ration days. What a treat it will be for the tired housewife to have her tea again in the mid-morning or afternoon when its delicious refreshment means so much to her.

You may depend on it, to the best of our ability, every grocer in Canada will be kept supplied with a fresh stock of delicious SALADA to meet these added needs.
