OUR RE-AWAKENING

One of the biggest days of Central British Columbia is over. It is being written into our history—our progressive history telling of the re-awakening of the north-central country.

With ceremony fitting the occasion and drawing ogether hundreds of men and women, together vith newswriters and cameramen from many parts of the province, the Skeena River Highway was officially opened Monday—Labor Day—at Terrace.

That it is a mighty piece of engineering, another conquest of a man over nature, is not the most important story. The real story has yet to be written. It is the story of the development that will come to Central British Columbia because of this highway. That story will be made not by the engineers, but by the people who populate this vast country.

Arising from this project we foresee a new spirit of co-operation in further efforts of road improvements and extension, particularly in the post-war period when public investment in many projects of social use are contemplated.

The maintenance, improvement and completion of the Skeena Highway as part of the Northern George Bernard Shaw's "And-Trans-provincial Highway warrants priority of attention by the Dominion and Provincial Governments as a great artery of travel and a necessary agent in the economic and social development of and the lion's skin, were made Central British Columbia.

"I can see it will be one of the principal highways of Canada,' he told his listeners.

"The Canadians have come through," Col. T. J. Weed, United States Army port commander, Prince Rupert, said.

"I was present at the opening of the Alaska highway and by comparison you have a real roadway. We consider it another means of moving personnel and equipment."

Leo Sweeney, representing Mayor Cornett of Vancouver, said that his city was pleased that Northern B.C. had at last got a road through.

"We feel that what helps any part of B.C. helps all of it," he declared. The two parts of the province should become better acquainted and some day we may have a caravan come from Vancouver to visit you."
