Post-war Air Transport . . .

With the Canadian government taking the lead in formulating post-war commercial air transport use of "guest players." Broadly policy, it is surprising how many people do not real-baller on active service can ise how much civil air transport really does during play for the club nearest to the war. Perhaps that it because we are not yet fully where he is stationed although air minded, or even publicity minded.

Then some time later we hope that jet propulsion and also tail-less aircraft will be developed sufficiently to let you fly

Do you ever wonder how the interior of a large modern transport aircraft would look to you when you first step inside? Something like a Pullman car or railway dining car. Roomy, with comfortable seats you can adjust to suit your own shape, for reading or dozing; a small galley for light meals, a place to hang your coats, lavatories; for night flights sleeping bunks.

There is no group of peoples in the world which will benefit more from good air communications than British peoples everywhere. Co-operation in air transport will help us enormously to make even greater contributions to world peace and understanding. Great good can come from the wise development of civil air transport particularly in Canada. Results.
