A TIMELY MOVE . . .

The Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce does well to interest itself actively in the matter of developing a market in Prince Rupert for the agricultural products of the central interior. Never has it been more timely that a move should be made to establish a set-up whereby the goods of the interior which need the market and the market of Prince Rupert which needs the goods should be brought together. Pursued along intelligent lines, here is a marketing project which would inevitably rebound to the mutual benefit and satisfaction of the consumers of this city on the one hand and the producers of the interior on the other. All it needs is to be properly organized.

It is true there is nothing new in the idea. Machinery has been set up on various occasions in the past to organize the local market for the interior products. For years there was a city market here. Difficulties of transportation and lack of proper grading were principal causes whereby the machinery was not able to function as satisfactorily as it might have. Now we are no longer completely dependent on the railway for transportation. We have a highway which will be available after the war, if not sooner, for public transit. The producers of the interior are more marketing conscious today and realize the importance of proper grading and preparation of goods.

Given the proper auspices, the farmers of the interior can provide products equally if not excelling the best that can be brought from the south. Not only vegetables and fruit, but eggs and dairy products—milk, cream and butter—can be furnished.

Enormous quantities of farm products are brought to Prince Rupert from the south even when our interior goods are in season. That means we are capable of absorbing a great deal more of the latter than we are getting and can support a considerable agricultural community there. Providing we go at the matter the right way, we should be able to do a lot along this line and it would be something that would contribute tangibly to the economic development of this part of the country.

COMMUNITY CHEST . . .

During the war years there has been a growing response on the part of many clubs and semi-public organizations wishing to assist in the humane and charitable activities made necessary by the conflict. Dozens of groups are helping to supply Red Cross needs, soldier comforts, Bundles for Britain, and other causes which no one will deny legitimate claims to our sympathy.

In all cases these groups find it necessary to seek the financial support of the public to carry on their work. In almost all cases part of the money is raised by tag days.

Now, about the only virtue a tag day possesses is the fact that it does raise money for a good cause. Otherwise it is pretty much of an embarrassment to the group which sponsors it and to the public which supports it. And the public, it appears, is getting tired of being solicited on street corners whenever it goes down town of a Saturday.

We affirm the right of these organizations to raise money for their work. However, we do not hold with the tag day idea.

Instead, let us organize a Community Chest. Other cities have tried it and it has become an integral part of their civic life. It eliminates the continuous duplication of effort of endless tag days and replaces it with sound organization.

A Community Chest is a pool of funds raised by annual or semi-annual subscription, from which all these organizations draw money to maintain their works. Possibly a Community Chest in Prince Rupert could not stand the strain of such national appeals as the Red Cross and Salvation Army but it could most certainly be organized to support the local groups which now raise money through tag days.

It is an idea which this newspaper has called to the public attention before and which we feel now is due for action.

GUN-TOTING SOVIET GALS LIKE FRILLS

Girls in Uniform Like Pretty Clothes

By ADELAIDE KERR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK, Sept. 22 (AP)—A woman's life in Russia would give you some surprises. Rowena Meyer, back home in America after nine years' teaching and broadcasting in the Soviet, notes these, for instance:

"People are always asking me whether Russian women soldiers who have served with men at the front have not lost their femininity," she says. "In Russia we never thought of such a thing. In the beauty parlor where I went I often used to see rifles stacked in the corner and I knew that the soldiers were in, having their facials and manures, while they were on leave. I knew I would not get my manure that day, because soldiers always got preference in any appointment.

"There were all kinds of women among those soldiers, from grandmothers to young bleached blonds, who came in to have eyelashes and eyebrows touched up. I used to talk to them in the shop. They just regarded their jobs as something that must be done—and done as quickly as possible.

"They wore the regular uniform—blue skirt and khaki blouse. But they loved pretty clothes and all the little accessories. All Russian women do. They are starved for those things because everything has had to go to the war effort. Everything I wore from America was always noticed and commented upon—even by the men.

Her Parasol Stopped Traffic

"Once in Batumi I was carrying a bright figured parasol and bag from America. I was just ready to cross the street when the policeman blew a sharp blast at me and I couldn't understand, so I called—in fear and trembling—out to ask him what I had done wrong.

"I just wanted to tell you I liked your umbrella," he yelled. Then he blew his whistle and traffic moved on."

Miss Meyer, a Brooklyn-born commercial artist, went to Russia in 1934, after the depression had swept away her job. She gave private English lessons in Moscow for a time, later broadcast in English in Khabarovsk and finally taught at the First Moscow State Pedagogical Institute of Foreign Languages. Miss Meyer was in Moscow during the siege of 1941. She returned to this country several months ago and has made a series of lectures under the auspices of the Russian War Relief.

"Russian women have really achieved equality," she said in conclusion. "They do equal work for equal pay and you never hear their brain capacity questioned. Moreover there are no burlesque and no cheese-cake pictures exploiting women in Russia.

"Very few women are servants. Women are encouraged to do better work. So most women have to do their own housework. Of course apartments in Moscow are small, due to the housing shortage—two rooms perhaps to a family of four. So there is not so much work to do. Because the wife works, the husband often helps with the housework and the marketing. You will often see men arguing with the butcher. Children are often kept at nurseries while their mothers work, but many come home at night. There is a warm close-knit family feeling."

"Wrap it well and mail it early," is the advice of the Fleet Mail Office to Canadians sending Christmas parcels to men and women serving in the Royal Canadian Navy at home stations, at sea or abroad. Last year more than half a million Christmas parcels were handled. One of the chief headaches is poorly wrapped parcels which collapse before they reach their destination. Here Donald Giles, 15-year-old Sea Cadet, employed as a messenger at the Fleet Mail Office in Halifax, checks out a bundle of re-wrapped parcels with Wren Lillian Paxton, of Port Arthur, Ont. The Fleet Mail Office advises the use of tough wrapping paper and strong string and warns against mailing anything packed in glass, such as peanut butter or preserves. The latest mailing dates at which parcels can be sent with any hope of reaching troops by Christmas are as follows—October 5: Middle East Area—Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Syria, etc.; October 10: Central Mediterranean Area; October 25: United Kingdom and France.

It Is Huge But Efficient

Each Day On Italian Front Carefully Planned

By DOUG HOW
Canadian Press War Correspondent

WITH THE CANADIANS IN ITALY, Sept. 25 (AP)—The Royal Canadian Regiment is a battalion which is a segment of a division which is a segment of a corps which is a segment of an army and there are two Allied armies fighting in Italy.

And the Royal Canadian Regiment, its 800-odd men, its less than 80 vehicles, its weapons and rations and baggage was, quite literally, this particular fighting day scattered over more than 80 Italian miles. When you multiplied this one battalion into dozens, thought of its 800-odd men as tens of thousands you wondered at the complex, ponderous thing a modern army is and wondered, too, at the efficiency with which it works.

Up front the rifle companies were working forward under the command of a lieutenant colonel. At his tactical headquarters were his intelligence officer, signal officer, his battle adjutant, the lieutenants in command of his specialist platoons, like mortars and machine-guns. His battle adjutant, Maj. Morgan John, Toronto, nominally commands the specialist support company but his presence—under a system started by now Maj. Gen. Dan Spry when he commanded the R.C.R.—at tactical headquarters is based mainly on the need for a senior officer with sound tactical knowledge, capable of giving orders when the colonel is out at taking over if he becomes a casualty.

Behind them this day was the "F" echelon with the Bren-gun carriers, the anti-tank guns, the mortar carriers, the company cooks, the scout platoon, or, essentially, the fighting vehicles. Normally this echelon would be with main headquarters but the road was narrow and choked with traffic this day and you could get so many vehicles up and no more.

Main headquarters was in a house beside a dusty road. There were the second-in-command, Maj. Storme Galloway, Aylmer, Ont., the head of the headquarters company, Maj. F. G. C. Darton, Halifax, and the men who staff this administrative crux of the whole battalion set-up. By a wireless set they have communication with tactical h.q. If the rifle companies want ammunition or new boots or petrol they call on Maj. Darton and he gets them forward.

On the roads that led back to "B" echelon, R. C. R. dispatch riders kept contact with the adjutant Maj. Ronald Liddell, Toronto, the quarter-master, Capt. John Prayner, Toronto, and the others who man this headquarters of store trucks, rations, petrol, fitters. On the adjutant falls most of the administrative problems. At main headquarters Maj. Darton handles those that are immediate, turns the rest back to Maj. Liddell. Up front, the colonel is left to fight his companies.

And finally there is "X" area where you find the shoemaker and the armorer, the baggage, the paymaster, all under Lieut. S. Shore, London, Ont. The "X" area didn't exist before the actions in the Liri valley. Then it came into being as a child of the policy dictated by the need to strip the frontline elements of a fighting unit down to the men and things it actually needs to fight with. That's why there were five fragments of the R.C.R. this day and why, of all its vehicles, less than 30 were operating beyond "B" echelon.

CO-OPERATIVES AND TAXATION

Matter Before Chamber of Commerce—Special Committee Named

A special committee of the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce is being appointed by President W. J. Scott to go into the question of co-operatives being exempted from federal income and excess profits taxes which private businesses are being called upon to pay.

The matter came up in a communication from the Saskatchewan Employees' Association which felt that competitive businesses should be on a fair and equal basis. "In fairness," said the letter "we ask that our competitors' should be made to pay as we pay."

This was a matter which affected every one who was in business individually, said J. J. Little. Cooperative businesses were able to progress and build up through being able to retain money which other businesses had to pay in taxes.

W. M. Watts mentioned that it was a matter which retail merchants organizations had already been taking up with the federal government.

The outcome of the discussion was the decision to have a special committee go into the matter and report.

WANTS BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS

Principal Takes P.T.A. Appeal Direct To City Council

A display of instruction books for school children decorated the reporter's table in the city council chamber last night as S. A. Cheeseman, principal of Borden Street School, appealed to Council on behalf of the Parent-Teachers' Association for a donation to help purchase additional modern reference books for city schools.

"Modern teaching methods require modern tools and our tools are books," Mr. Cheeseman declared. He added that the present textbooks prescribed by the department are not in line with the modern trend.

"The Department is working on a revision of the list of books for official use in schools but it may be a year or two before it is complete."

Last year the P.T.A. raised over $500 for purchase of books and sports equipment in city schools, and this year they have set their goal at $1,000.

The absence of a library at the new Conrad Street School has increased the demand for funds, Mr. Cheeseman said.

"Has the School Board been approached for a donation?" Alderman Hills asked as he and other members gathered around the book laden table.

Mr. Cheeseman did not know if the Board had been asked for a donation.

"Even though the money comes from the same source I do not see why both the Council and the Board should be asked to give," the alderman commented.

The matter was referred to the finance committee for consideration.

VENEER PLANT FOR VANCOUVER

Correspondence from John Bene, who was in this district recently investigating the development of the plywood industry, indicated to the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce last night that, while timber from this part of the province might be used, the veneer plant, which Western Plywoods Co. Ltd. of Vancouver intends establishing, will be located at Vancouver. Mr. Bene expressed appreciation of the co-operation of W. J. Scott, president of the Chamber, in assisting him to gather data here. This would be of value if the question of establishing a plant at Prince Rupert should ever come up later.

SHOULD USE FOOD RIGHT

Simple Rules For Diet Outlined By Lady Expert Visiting City

"Food prices may sometimes seem high and local shortages may occur from time to time but compared with the people of other nations, Canadians are fortunate as far as food supplies are concerned." This statement is made by Miss Mary Baldwin, nutrition consultant with the Provincial Board of Health, who is in Prince Rupert. Miss Baldwin went on to say that, unfortunately, food supplies are not always wisely used. In fact extensive surveys of eating habits made in centres across Canada show that only 40 percent of the nation is eating well balanced meals. Ignorance, indifference and economic factors are felt to be responsible for this poor showing.

It is in order to help overcome the indifference and ignorance that the Prince Rupert Nutrition Committee has made extensive plans for the current nutrition week. Through the food stores, theatre, radio, public meetings and the press, the people of Prince Rupert will be made familiar with the essentials of a well balanced diet.

"It's all very simple," says Miss Baldwin, "Just five rules to follow:
"Milk—½ pint for adults and more than 1 pint for children.
"Fruits—2 servings a day. One should be citrus or a substitute.
"Vegetables—3 servings a day. One should be potatoes.
"Meat, Fish, Poultry, Eggs—1 serving a day plus 3-4 eggs a week.
"Cereals and Bread—1 serving of a whole grain cereal and 4-6 slices Canada Approved bread, brown or white."
"In addition, iodized salt should be used and a source of Vitamin D, such as Cod Liver Oil should be taken during those months of the year when sunshine is scarce."

Work with Interior

Special Committee of Local Chamber of Commerce

With a view to developing the market in Prince Rupert for produce of the central interior, a new committee of the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce is to be set up, it was decided at last night's meeting.

J. E. Boddie brought the matter up by stating that, on recent visits to Terrace, he had seen produce wasting because there was no labor to gather it and, even when it was gathered, there was difficulty in getting it to market owing to transportation costs and lack of organization. Now that the Skeena River Highway was completed, he felt that steps should be taken to establish a market in Prince Rupert for these fine interior goods. Possibly the city market idea might be revived to the benefit of all concerned.

W. M. Watts suggested the idea of the marketing committee which would stress the importance of people in the city purchasing interior products and, besides aiding in developing the local market, might assist in having a better packing and preparing of produce for market. He suggested co-operation with farmers' institutes of the interior.

Students Attend Council Meeting

Three Booth Memorial high school students attended City Council meeting last night to take notes on the procedure with the purpose of turning in a report to their classes. They were Bert Thorsteinsson, Norman Martinson and Nina Youngman, who sat beside the desk occupied by Mayor Daggett and scribbled diligently.

At the start of the meeting they were welcomed by the mayor.

"I think it a very good idea for young people to attend Council meetings and take an interest in civic affairs. As future voters they are wise in learning the processes of municipal government."

SPINE TINGLER COMEDY HERE

"The Ghost Breakers," With Hope and Goddard, Here

Mystery, murder, chicanery and comedy are blended into one picture in "The Ghost Breakers" which comes to the Capitol Theatre here for this Wednesday only with Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard sharing starring honors.

Briefly, the story has to do with Paulette's inheritance of a haunted castle on an island of Cuba. Sinister forces are at work to frighten her into selling the estate without even investigating stories of horror and sudden death that are associated with the castle. Bob Hope, in the character of a radio commentator, becomes her ally and, during a night in the mystery house, experience all sorts of frights and thrills before the secret of the castle and its arch-murderer is revealed in an unexpected denouement.

The cast also includes Richard Carlson, Paul Lukas, Anthony Quinn and Willie Best.
