Heavy salvos of gunfire along the French coast, reported from Folkestone, England, indicated that the battle for remaining French Channel ports was reaching new fury today. Perhaps the Allies are even storming German suicide strongholds in Calais, Cap Grizz Nez and Boulogne areas.

The German garrison at the great French port of LeHavre surrendered to British troops of the First Canadian Army today. The German commander was badly wounded and ordered survivors, estimated at 5,000, to lay down their arms. The surrender of the second largest seaport in France came just 36 hours after the British launched an assault on the port which was crucially needed to supply the Allied armies now that fall gales are near.

MINING IS COMING BACK . . .

In the first review of mining activity to come out of Stewart for a considerable time, the Daily News was able to tell its readers yesterday of a measure of exploration activity there this year comparable with any season in the history of the famous Portland Canal district. This speaks well for the active preparations that are being made by the mining interests for a large scale resumption of the industry once the war is over and there is a return to normal peace time pursuits. There are other signs these days of an early revival of the mining industry, one of these being the current flurry of interest in mining securities.

No doubt, mining will play an important part in providing employment for men as they are released from the armed forces after the fighting is over and the direct war industries commence to slacken off. The lack of manpower has been responsible to large extent for numerous mines, many of them in this district, being unable to carry on during the past few years.

Not only in the Portland Canal but in other mining areas of this district are mining prospects even now commanding a new measure of interest. It may not be so long now before the industry is resuming its important role in the providing of prosperity and employment in these parts.

of Commerce, at its meeting Picture Here last night, decided to take no action in connection with resolution emanating from the Prince George Board of Trade which would have protested against a scheme of the provincial government on the ground that it was discriminatory against ex-service men from provinces other than British Columbia taking up land here.

G. R. S. Blackaby, on behalf of a committee which had been delegated to go into the matter, expressed the opinion that the government's plan was merely one of bonusing British a young priest dispatched to a Columbia returned men by giving them title to land for which others would have to pay. The plan could hardly be described as being discriminatory against returned men from other provinces. The board accepted the committee's suggestion that no action be taken in endorsing the Prince George protest.

Unanimously acclaimed in the big cities where it has consistently commanded hold-over engagements, "Going My Way," which comes to the Capitol Theatre this Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, is hailed as by far the finest of any of Bing Crosby's pictures to date. The picture is declared to be remarkably life-like and rich in human understanding. Frank McHugh, Rise Stevens and Gene Lockhart also have important parts.

The story is the simple saga of small parish to take charge of activities and establish it on a sound financial basis. Bing, as Father "Chuck" O'Malley, finds t difficult at first to put any of his measures into practice. Selfeffacing, Bing takes orders, cajoles his senior, bows to the older man's whims but still manages to organize such an unheard-of thing as a boys' choir, settle lover's quarrel, placate the bank president who holds the parish mortgage and sell a song to raise money for a new building.
