HAPPY RELATIONS

The Prince Rupert visit of Hon. Ray C. Atherton, United States ambassador to Canada, may be considered one of the high points of the three-year, three-pointed co-operation between Canadian civil and military and United States military authorities in this area. The success of this celebration was the culmination of the fellowship which has developed in spite of inevitable difficulties during the past three years.

Although they have a common language and common social and economic background, Canadians and Americans were not very well acquainted before the war. In the urgency of the crisis which brought them here, the Americans might easily have offended Canadian sensibilities, and Canadians, conversely, might readily have found excuse to repell what a few cynics have called the "American occupation of Northwest Canada."

That those attitudes were avoided, and replaced by the fine relationship shown during the ambassador's visit reflects with utmost favor on Americans and Canadians alike.

The good spirit shown Thursday was more than of the game that on this day we a sudden spurt of good manners. It was the flower- found a pig boat." That's how ing of deep and worthy attitudes.

TRUE STORIES OF CANADIAN WAR HEROES

CANADIAN

NE of the few Canadians to fight with Wingate's Raiders in the U leech-filled jungles of Burma, Neil Turnbull . . . a corporal in the Royal Canadian Signals . . . fought off a Jap bayonet charge two hours after he first hit the front line.

In palm, teakwood and banyan, where soldiers can't see their buddies within 40 feet, radio is vital . . . like bullets.

Army ants hungrily ate insulation from radios of Wingate's Raiders, and mildew ruined exposed wiring. Ant-proof radio had to be flown to the battle zone at grave risk, and Turnbull, who had never been in a plane, volunteered to go.

Reaching base above the airfield Turnbull's group of four came under fierce fire with Japs using explosive bullets, mortars and howitzers.

Turnbull took refuge in a foxhole near his gear, but under increased fury of fire was ordered to abandon the precious radio, and retire.

After dark, in creepy light, the Japs charged with bayonetted rifles, knives and swords. Turnbull and his three men fought off that charge with Tommy guns, then raced forward.

They killed a dozen Japs, drove others to retreat, retrieved the vital radio intact, then joined the British in fighting off a second Jap charge with great loss to the enemy, none to themselves.

For such gallantry in his first battle, a salute to a jungle-going Canadian signaller.

Canadians can be proud of their part in the great Invasion of the Continent. Ships of the Royal Canadian Navy, over 700 of them, landed Canadian fighting men, who captured a dozen towns in the first forty-eight hours, while the men of the R.C.A.F. played their part in the air overhead. Until final victory, the men and management at U.D.L. will continue to produce high-test alcohol for vital war materials in this war-geared plant-twenty-four hours a day-every day in the year. More than any similar plant in Canada.

In 1924, U.D.L. commenced operations at its present location on the banks of the Fraser River. Today, after two decades of consistent progress-with seventeen acres of modern buildings and equipment-second to none in the Deminion, it is Western Canada's only independent distillery.
