The Teaching Profession . . .

Men and women are reluctant to adopt teaching as a career unlessand this, of course, happens-they are such "born" teachers that the year-by-year compensation of seeing young people progress becomes its own regard, says a writer in Christian Science Monitor. The reports are that there are fewer and fewer men teachers available and fewer and fewer preparing for teaching careers. Women, to whom teaching was once one of the few careers open, are finding, too, more remunerative occupations beckoning them.

This deplorable situation can be corrected in two ways. One of them is for the teaching profession to be put on a higher level of social recognition and respect by offering it wages and salaries commensurate with the background required, the effort expended, and the results. This method is succeeding slowly.

Another way-and it is one considered by a few far-thinking heads of private and special schools-is to give opportunity to men and women who have the interest and welfare of the nation's youth at heart, to teach, without a too liberal application of teaching regulations.

The hope of the country lies in the boys and girls now in the primary and secondary schools. They must be trained to meet the changes this war has brought, the problems of an atomic age only a few minutes old. It will take teaching of a new kind-in which textbooks serve merely as outlines for that speculation and experiment which teaches each

Fire Chief of Future Depends On Shooting Eye

Firemen at the U.S. Army fire hall here are wondering if their chief is as accurate with a gun as he is with a hose nozzle. If long, long time. *

Chief Peters left last night on a moose hunting trip to the inpromise that might commit im to an extensive stay in the wilderness around Topley.

"I will stay away," he vowed, until I shoot a moose."

The combination of circumstances which might conspire to keep one of Chief Peters's bul- from the whistle. ets from lodging in a vital spot in a Topley moose is being sericusly explored by the boys in the fire department.

"We hope," said one, with a vision of moose steak obviously inspiring him, "that the chief will be back in two weeks. However, there is a group here of the ure date. According to Norton by Christmas."
