Could It Happen Here?

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST tells how five towns around Gray's Harbor, Washington, which had boomed for seventy years from the operation of sawmills and then started to fade away when the Douglas fir became depleted, recouped themselves through the enterprise and initiative of their own people and are now flourishing, growing communities again. The success story of these towns might be an inspiration for Prince Rupert people who, instead of sitting around and waiting for somebody to do something for them, might get organized and take steps themselves to bring industrial activity to the community.

But getting back to Gray's Harbor, after a series of pep meetings at which new industrial possibilities were convassed, leaders of the largest towns, Aberdeen and Hoquiam, challenged the people to invest money—a maximum of $1000 apiece—in themselves. Presently $60,000 was raised and, with this stake, the folks got the boom rolling.

No money was lent to individuals; it went into laving a firm economic foundation. Old-and new-industries had to be guaranteed a steady, plentiful supply of raw materials. To aid fishermen, the harbor was deepened at Westport, one of the towns. Fisheries-research laboratories were established to find new products and methods of |considered and support offered | provincial government had regard to furnishing the home. ordered filed, was in reply to a improving old ones. Bogs were readied for cranberry planting. Reforestation was begun and haul roads improved. Thousands of dollars went into telling outsiders with capital about Gray's Harbor's cheap electricity from two near-by dams, the fine harbor and the responsible labor element, composed of home-towners who had bet money on themselves.

The Gray's Harbor story will be continued indefinitely. Today's chapter is about a boom which not only is rolling along but looks as though it had come to stay. Three canneries have helped create United States' second-largest cranberry-growing section, with some of the bog lands producing $4500 per acre. A thousand fishing boats bring to eight canneries an annual catch of 10,000 tons of tuna. Red salmon, shark livers, crabs and clams support thousands of people. Plywood, woodworking and pulp industries are piling up pay rolls.

As the boom swells, the planning problems of Gray's Harbor becomes more complicated. Now they are hustling to find logs to supply the demands of their various woodworking plants, and trying to devise ways of taking care of the thousands of new settlers who are pouring into the crowded

Shortages Still

MIHILE there has been a general increase in supplies, Canada still faces shortages brought on in part worldwide shortages of materials and foodstuffs. The worldwide shortages materially restrict the importation of many commodities such as sugar, vegetable oils, tin, rubber, and cotton yarns and fabrics. Coupled with these shortages, industrial disputes have seriously affected the output of automobiles, home appliances, metal building materials, and a number of other goods. The latest difficulty is the freight car shortage. In addition, the high rate of demand creates shortages even in the case of some goods which are being produced in substantially greater volume than prior to the war.

Advertising and Sales

T'S IMPOSSIBLE to predict the response for a single ad, but retailers who have advertised for many years know almost exactly how much advertising will produce a certain volume of sales.

According to a national survey the average amount of advertising of all firms dealing in various retail lines is only about 1 to 5% of sales, so that every dollar spent in advertising produces from twenty to a hundred dollars in sales!

Here are the findings of the survey for various kinds of retail business. They show the average amount spent in advertising for each hundred dollars' worth of sales:

Department store, $3.30; men's wear, $2.90; women's wear, $3.15; shoe stores, $2.90; furniture stores, $4.80; grocery stores, $1.50; meat markets, $1.90; - druggists, $2.00; jewellery stores, $2.90; appliance stores, $3.60.

Northern Ireland Checks Car Racket

BELFAST, Northern Ireland ()-Clamping down on an automobile re-sale racket, the Royal Ulster Constabulary has been ordered to seize all unregistered cars crossing from Eire into Northern Ireland. Until now, persons who eluded Eire customs authorities were allowed to pay a compromise penalty for importing the car by an unapproved route, in addition to purchase tax and import duty. The vehicles then were reexported to England where they could be sold at prices considerably higher than that originally paid for them. The first car seized by the R.U.C. was a (tf) 25-horsepower car driven from Eire by a Belfastman.
