Revive the Exhibition

ASSING of Prince Rupert's historic Exhibition Building on Roosevelt Park Hill, which all but blew down in Tuesday's gale and is now due for immediate demolition, brings to mind the many great fairs which we used to have in former days and which did much to establish and maintain Prince Rupert's contact with her agricultural hinterland. In those times our only communication with the interior was by railway and the representation from there was limited although on some occasions quite substantial and far-reaching at that. Today we have the highway which makes the farms and the farmers of the central interior so much more readily accessible, enabling the people not only to ride in under their own power but to bring their exhibits along with them. To come to the point, we are here seriously suggesting the revival of the Prince Rupert Exhibition which could well be a meeting place for the agricultural community of our district and, as before, the venue for the exposition of the varied and interesting natural resources and industries of this great district.

It must be apparent how the resumption of such a show with the attention and publicity it would command, might well be a very effective step towards the development of the area. We talk of what we might do to encourage the industrial development of these parts. Here would appear to be something very much within the range of our capacity.

Fortunately, even with the Exhibition Building gone, there is still the fine Roosevelt Park gym which would appear to be very readily adaptable to this very use.

It takes time, of course, to organize such a thing as a fair and there should be no time lost, if we decide to go ahead, in getting started.

As for ourselves, we think it would be of great mutual benefit to have something of this sort again. It would provide a meeting place for the instruction, edification and entertainment of the people of Prince Rupert and the folks from all around whose acquaintance, friendship and understanding we would be doing well to foster.

TO MOST of us, which is so abundent in a foreign land is with the this area, may seem merely collection of odd plants rocks or tangle themselves around the oars of one's rowboat; to the industrial scientist, seaweed is a valuable source of agar and algin. These extracts play a bigger part in our lives than is realized. Yet, despite the large quantities of marine plans which grow on our extensive coastline, all the seawood products used in this province have been imported from other parts of the world. Becan be successfully established, fore a marine plant industry however, it is necessary to know what types of plants grow here, whether harvestable quantities exist, and what the yield of commercially important products would be. With these facts in mind. the British Columbia Research Council, during the summer of 1946, surveyed a large part of the B. C. coast for seaweeds. Varieties of plants were noted. records were made of locations and quantities, and samples were taken for analysis in the Research Council's chemical laboratory.

The plants studied in the ents of pharmaceuticals, and greatest detail were the kelps, Macrocystis and Nereocystis. by rope stems up to 20 yeards Attached to the ocean bottom long, these plants have ribbon-like leaves, buoyed on the surface by gas-filled bladders. The kelps form dense beds near the shore where the sea currents are not too strong and the depth of water is between six and 60 feet. When harvtested, the plants are cut below the surface by various types of cutters or mowers mounted on boats or barges.

Algin, the most important ingredient of the B.C. kelps, forms about 20 per cent of the dry weight of the plant, an amount fully the equal of that in kelps collected commercially elsewhere. When dried in the form of sodium alginate, the extracted algin is a granular or fibrous white powder. It dissolves slowly in water to form a thick, gummy liquid. Insoluble forms of algin can be prepared by adding various salts. As a replacement for casein, gum tragacanth, albumin and gelatin, algin is widely used for thick-

Ellen Wilkinson

MINUTIVE and pugnacious, red-haired Ellen Wilkinson, minister of education in the British Labor government, who died today, rose to a position of command-both in the Labor party where she became chairman and in Prime Minister Churchill's wartime coalition government-after 16 stormy years in Parliament and nearly twice that number as a labor organizer.

In what she terms "my less respectable days," Miss Wilkinson was a street-corner rabble rouser of repute and Wildcat strikes were touched off when she sounded the call and at one time she led a hunger march against Whitehall.

First elected in Middlesborough in 1929, "Red Ellen," as she was called, gained a reputation for swift, devastating wit in debate, but was thought too radical for responsibility. After being returned by Jarrew in 1935, however, she soon gained stature and with the outbreak of war worked untiringly with the coalition government as parliamentary secretary in the ministry for home security.

Many times after her frontbench appointment in 1940 she was called upon to defend government policy to a restive Labor party which twice called for her resignation. On each occasion the opposition wilted when she personally answered her critics.

One of the two women on Britain's delegation to the San Francisco Conference, she left her government post with the breakup of the wartime coalition to seek re-election in Jarrow. She was elected and became minister of education in Clement Attlee's Labor government.
