DAILY TRAIN SERVICE

WITH a steadily rising business tempo throughout the area served by the Canadian National through Central British Columbia, one of our paramount and pressing needs at the moment is a daily mail and passenger service.

Evidence of this need and of how aggressive and farsighted individuals and companies are profiting by the situation can be seen at every hand.

In the interior bus and truck concerns are expanding in all directions, carrying passengers and freight which in the past have been at the mercy of a "toonerville trolley" type of train service.

Air travel and long-distance telephone calls are growing in volume as a new generation of alert businessmen recognizes that business will not wait while mail gathers dust in post offices from Prince Rupert to Red Pass Junction.

Evidently our railway officials have their eyes on the "quick dollar" rather than future business and profits as the Prince Rupert-Red Pass line gradually assumes the character of a logging and fishing spur. They ignore the fact that central and northern B.C. is over the threshold of an era of expansion and prosperity exceeding even the rosy dreams of its townsites "boomers." The evidence is all around us. Completion of the Hart Highway will link southern and northern B.C. and tap new areas of wealth—forest, waterpower, coal and minerals. The projected Hazelton-Alaska road will intersect a country of many potentialities. There is every possibility the P.G.E. will be extended into the Peace River country. Traffic and trade will flow north and south, infusing new life into communities along the C.N.R. by the northward expansion of the province's frontiers.

Entry of the huge Celanese Corporation of America into this field is but the forerunner of similar moves by other pulp and paper companies. The abundant natural resources of B.C.'s hinterland are about to be exploited on a large scale. Periods of business depression may temporarily slacken this development. Nothing can halt it.

Businessmen in this country are keenly aware of the new era upon which we are entering. They are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on new business sites, new premises, new equipment, confident the future will justify their optimism. They are wagering our prosperity is solid and permanent.

Would it be too much to ask officials of our publicly-owned transportation system and of the Post Office Department to display a little of the same vision, courage and energy? Or must our development be retarded indefinitely by a mail and rail service reminiscent of stage coach and river boat days?

Thousands of residents from Prince Rupert to the Alberta boundary would like to know.

ECONOMIC UNDERSTANDING

AN ISSUE of major importance to all Canadians, is the type of economy which has made this continent the envy of the whole world. It is essential that this economy be better understood for the positive values it gives each individual citizen—values affecting his personal liberties—his standard of living and the opportunities or himself and his children.

Some time ago the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade set up a committee to study the collectivist threat to our free society. Here are some of its findings:

"The communist preaches a gospel of negation about our wealth-producing way of life because he knows that communism here cannot stand up against our successful economic system and the tremendous advantages it brings to the free peoples on this continent—unless by boring from within, by disruption and by propaganda he can win a following.

"The well-intentioned socialist attempts to minimize the advantages which we have today and to replace our present economy by instituting the monopoly of the state. He believes in total planning in place of the opportunities our present system offers where the individual is not subjected to the central authority of the state with its impact on his personal rights, his freedoms, his initiative and his rewards. In the competition for men's minds the socialists, too, are vocal for their promissory plans.

"Probably the most important point established through the study is that while we have achieved a fabulous record of industrial progress on this continent, management, labor and the public have only a scanty understanding of the principles which have made our system and its fruits the source to which the whole world now looks for aid.

"It seems to us to be a matter of first importance that business management become conscious of the need to tell their employees not only how our system works—but also why it works as it does. It is time for business not only to speak out but also to adopt modern methods and techniques in seeing that the story of the world's most successful economic system is known and understood."

'Muskeg' Joins Pioneers' Home

Canine Veteran Seems Happy and Contented at Last With the Old Gentlemen

"Muskeg," Prince Rupert's canine veteran, may spend his declining days at the Pioneers' Home in Westview. Where he should find abode for the closing phases of a colorful career has been posing a problem to the authorities of late. But, "Muskeg," who is not without some eccentricities, one of which is a dogged determination to choose his own associates, may have settled it for himself since he has voluntarily assumed residence with the pioneers. He arrived there a few days ago and Caretaker Peter Montchall reports that he has not left since.

"We like him and evidently he likes us," said Mr. Montchall, "and we hope he will stay."

At the Pioneers' Home, as a matter of fact, "Muskeg" is merely renewing old acquaintance for he and Mr. Montchall were friends in the war days when "Muskeg" was with the United States Army for which Mr. Montchall was a civilian worker.

A few weeks ago, after "Muskeg" had developed itinerant ideas, he was taken in custody made by the police for a home for him. Many offers were received and he was finally taken to Barrett Point camp where, however, he did not long remain, straying back into town.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Smith have come back into town after spending a few weeks at the Falls River power plant where Mr. Smith was relieving.

MRS. M. McROBBIE PASSES AWAY

Mrs. Margaret McRobbie, a resident of Prince Rupert for the last 27 years, passed away shortly before noon today at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. R. Morin, 326 Sixth Avenue East. She was 80 years old and had been ill for a number of years.

Born in Banffshire, Scotland, deceased came to Prince Rupert in 1920. She was pre-deceased by her husband in Scotland 35 years ago.

Surviving in Prince Rupert are two daughters, Mrs. J. R. Morin and Mrs. David Macphie, as well as one grandson, two granddaughters and one great-grand daughter. There also is one sister in Scotland, and two brothers George Dalgarno, in San Fernando, California, and Ben Dalgarno in Victoria.

Mrs. McRobbie for many years was a faithful worker of the Presbyterian Church.

LIFE in this Prince Rupert

by BIDDEE JINKS

Last summer it was nice to see the various totem poles of the city take back their native colorings. Somehow, black-and-white was wrong, pertaining more to electric stoves and checker-boards than to such monuments of skill and natural art.

Charles Dudoward is the man rightly chosen to do this redeeming work. Belonging to the Kin-a-ga-heak tribe of the Tsimpseans, he is heir to Indian knowledge as well as to the artistic temperament of his family.

Long ago, Charles Dudoward's great-grandfather painted the totems. His name was Kamak. Known proudly among his people, he was one of the few artists, for they were as scarce as the carvers whose tools of bone and stone made a cedar magnificent. In all the coastal region, less than a dozen men qualified to do either of these skillful operations.

Kamak's paints too were a product of nature coupled with ingenuity. Red and yellow came from certain mineral deposits on the Naas and Skeena Rivers. Placed there by some volcanic eruption of past ages they were crushed into powder within the oval bottomed, stone basin. Mixed with water, they were thick, and as soft as the speech about them.

Green was a vegetable dye; white was powdered, burned clam shells, also crushed by hand in stone basins, while black was most in use and most indelible.

In early times, some native son gave thought to the inky substance which the devil-fish or octopus, spewed into the water while fighting. The next time one clung to his net with squirming ugliness, it was dissected. Within the body lay an egg of viscid black. Used alone, it was of no use, but out of time and experiment, this egg was used to perfection.

They were gathered and dried thoroughly. Dogfish roe (which has large, separate eggs) was also dried. Put together, they were powdered by the stone-basin method, a little water added, more pounding, more water until the right consistency was reached. A little of this substance added to water, gave the Indians the black paint which has been found to penetrate five inches into the wood.

Of course Mr Dudoward uses commercial paints. The first coat is of general, oesred colorings, but the final one is mixed, shaded to be as nearly as possible like the totems reared in the forests of his forefathers. Born in Port Simpson, Charles Dudoward was the son of a Kin-a-ga-heak chief. "As many as mosquitoes," said their tribal name in the days before Duncan divided the band and went to New Metlakatla. His mother was a graduate of an Anglican college in Victoria and received a medal from the King in honor of her work among her own people. When she was a girl, she told her son more than five thousand natives lived in Port Simpson.

Mr. Dudoward paints more than totems, however. Learning to use oils, he has several scenes on canvas. His daughter, Audrey, also paints, but is exceptionally skilful in needle work. Quite recently she finished a tapestry table-cloth which is to be on display in the office of the Indian Agent, F. E. Anfield, showing all the emblems of the family crest, the Thunderbird, the Grizzly, and blackfish are there, exquisitely worked in native colours.

Death of the 'Pheasant'

(By Harry Seaman)

PRINCE GEORGE—An old boiler that years ago gave good service to a sawmill but now lies disused was once the heart of a sturdy little river steamer named "Pheasant". She died on the bank of Red Rock Canyon.

In the fall of 1906, the "Pheasant" had made her final voyage of the season up stream and on a contract job for the government. The crew, assisted by a government engineer and two men, were to blast away the rocks in the river bed that were dangerous to river boats. The "Pheasant" was picked for the job because she was one of the smallest boats and could safely operate in the shallow water necessary for the job.

Red Rock Canyon it was decided to leave the three big white boulders in the channel. Low water there were two wings on one side and one on the other but at steamboat time there was always plenty of water over the rocks for any boat that piled the river.

Walter Warner, who tells the story, was purser on the "Pheasant" then but had been left behind at Kispiox to collect some accounts for the company. Riding the river in a 12-foot dugout, he later caught his ship at the end of Red Rock Canyon and partly after they loaded up with wood for the boiler furnace and prepared to run down the coast and a winter berth.

There was plenty of room for the "Pheasant" to go between the white rocks that had been left in the river. Walter thinks some little mistake must have gone wrong with the controls for, just as she approached the danger spot, the boat began to swing sideways.

Her nose caught the first of the two rocks on one side and she swung like a gate broadside to the current. Force of the water lifted the "Pheasant" onto the third rock that was projecting out of the water about eighteen inches. With all the weight bearing down on the pinnacle of rock the ends of the boat began to sag, the windows shattered under the strain and the buckled smoke-stack came crashing down. Partly dammed by the broadside of the "Pheasant", the water piled up and pushed the stricken craft on over the rock. But the "Pheasant" had been holed and her back was broken. Water poured in amidships and it seemed as though the boat would flip in the middle. With the rapids just ahead and a sinking helpless ship beneath their feet, the chances of coming out of the accident alive did not rate very high with the crew. Fortunately a back eddy caught the boat and swung her up stream and close enough to shore for the deckhands to leap on the banks and make lines fast to trees.

So now the bones of the "Pheasant" are strewn in the waters of Red Rock Canyon while her heart lies rusting beside a busy mill.

Passengers arriving in the city Saturday afternoon on the C.P.A. flight from the south were Mr. and Mrs. P. Berg from Vancouver, Miss R. Stone, Vancouver, and Mr. and Mrs. Habkirk, Queen Charlotte City. Outbound passengers this afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. M. MacIntyre for Sandspit and C. Clapp, W. Johnson, S. Berg, J. B. WEDDING JOINS LOCAL FAMILIES

Miss Lois Howe Becomes Bride of Oliver Keays

A daughter and son of two well-known Prince Rupert families were joined in marriage in the Manse of First Presbyterian Church Saturday evening, when Olive Lois, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Howe, became the bride of Oliver James Keays, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Keays. The rite was performed by Rev. A. F. MacSween. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white nylon sheer over satin, with train and veil, and carried a bouquet of red roses. Her attendant was Miss Irene Larsen, who wore a gown of yellow sheer, with matching head dress and carried a bouquet of pink carnations and purple irises.

Groomsman was Robert Keays, brother of the bridegroom. A reception at Valhalla Hall followed the ceremony. The guests, who numbered about 150, were received by the mothers of the bride and bridegroom. The hall was beautifully decorated with hawthorn branches.

Centring the bride's table was a three-tier wedding cake which was cut in traditional manner. Toast to the bride was proposed by Alderman George Rudderham and was responded to by the groom. Miss Patsy McCormack sang "Yours". The evening was spent in dancing to music by Andy McNaughton. The mother of the groom wore a gown of green figured with black. The mother of the bride wore floor-length jersey of rust and green. The newly married couple have taken up residence on Sixth Avenue East.

Many Enjoy Moose Card-Dance Party

Prince Rupert Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, was host Saturday night to scores of members and their friends who enjoyed an evening of card playing and dancing. Winners at whist were Mrs. B. Shurpe and Mrs. T. Kildal with C. McNab and Barney Kristmanson tallying high scores among the men. Entertainment committee chairman, William Terry, directed the whist drive. Dancing, with music provided by Robert's Orchestra, followed cards. During the intermission, refreshments were served and whist prizes distributed.

FORMAL DANCE AT SEAL COVE

Season's Activities Brought to Fitting Close—Presentations Made

To wind up organization activities of the season, a highly enjoyable formal dance was held Friday evening in St. Peter's Hall which was gaily decorated for the occasion. Some fifty members and guests of the St. Peter's Young People's Association attended.

During the evening presentation of a silver trophy cup was made to Group 3, being accepted on behalf of the group by Vaughan Tattersall in the absence of group leader Jim Hemmons, who is working out of town and was, therefore, unable to attend the function. The presentation was made under a system adopted by the Club last year, whereby the whole organization was divided into three competitive groups which, throughout the season, have been vying with one another for "points," awarded for attendance, proficiency in quizzes, games and sports, program construction, and various other club activities. Group 3 under leader Jim Hemmons, won the coveted award with 635 points. Group 1, under leader Henry Dixon, ran close second with 631 points, and Group 2, under leader Jack Wynn, had 620 points.

An individual merit award was presented to Jack Wynn, who, by himself, obtained 79 points during the year. Charles Graham, club president, came second with 76 points. Jack's prize was a handsome fountain pen with his name engraved in gold letters. The presentations were made by Mrs. Helen Marchildon, supervisor of the organization.

Games and dancing took up most of the enjoyable evening, during which several new novelty dances were introduced. At 11 o'clock a horseshoe-shaped table was set up at one end of the hall, laid with white tablecloths and centered with vases of delicate pink roses and deep blue violets from the garden of Canon W. F. Rushbrook, delicious home made refreshments were served therefrom. After supper, the presentations were made after which dancing continued until well after midnight.

Arrangements for the dance were made by Mildred Furunes, Diane Kennedy, Shirley Tremer and Jack Wynn.

During the evening, beautiful corsages were presented to each of the girls present.

DECORATION RITES HONOR WAR VETERANS

Tribute to the sacrifices of Canadian veterans of the first and second World Wars was paid Sunday afternoon by Prince Rupert's I.O.D.E. Chapters, Canadian Legion and Canadian Legion Women's Auxiliary during impressive Decoration Day ceremonies at the Cenotaph and at the Soldiers' plot at Fairview Cemetery.

The rows of graves were marked with small, fluttering Union Jacks placed at the headstones by the I.O.D.E. and Legion ladies while on the stones were blood-red poppies, placed reverently by Legion members to the memory of their dead comrades. At the base of the cenotaph were placed wreaths by representatives of all three organizations.

Led by Prince Rupert's Civic Band under Bandmaster Peter Lien, the parade of 75 marched from the Canadian Legion Hall to the Cenotaph, where wreaths were placed by Mrs. R. S. Donaldson, second vice - Regent, Municipal Chapter, I.O.D.E.; Vic Houston, Canadian Legion president, and Mrs. J. S. Black, president Canadian Legion Women's Auxiliary.

In trucks and cars, the group then drove to Fairview Cemetery where a short, dignified ceremony followed at the Veterans' Plot.

The ceremony began with a prayer delivered by Mrs. J. A.

Teng, Regent, Queen Mary Chapter. Then the "Last Post" was sounded by Legion Bugler W. J. Rance. At the conclusion of a two-minute period of silence, Bugler Rance sounded "Reveille." The flag was lowered and raised, during the bugle calls, by W. E. Denning.

Rev. R. A. Wilson of First United Church, addressed the gathering. He said that the world has now come to a place where it must make a choice between following a path that will lead to desolation and ruin, or one which will bring brotherhood and security.

"The men we honor today are our benefactors, but we too easily forget our benefactors," he said. "The sacrifices of one generation are scarcely understood by the next. Today, we have met here quietly and reverently in respect to men who have heroically made us the recipients of their sacrifices. Their sacrifices have brought us to the place where we must make a choice between desolation and ruin, or brotherhood and security."

At the conclusion of Rev. Mr. Wilson's address, the band led in the hymn "O God Our Help In Ages Past". The group then decorated the graves. The ceremony was conducted with the singing of "God Save The King."

On the return to the city, the parade was re-formed at Seventh Street, on Third Avenue, and marched to the Legion hall, where it was dismissed.

THE NEW JUDGE—An informal but happy characteristic pose of His Honor, William Otis Fulton, new County Court judge of Prince Rupert who was sworn in at the end of last week in Vancouver. Judge Fulton is returning to Prince Rupert on Wednesday of this week, accompanied by Mrs. Fulton.

HOW MAPLE SYRUP WAS FIRST MADE

JASPER—A maple breakfast, featuring twenty gallons of Vermont maple syrup brought expressly from the Green Mountain state to the Canadian Rockies was one of the concluding events of the educational conference of the National Life Insurance Company at Jasper Park Lodge here Saturday.

More than five hundred men and women were served wheat cakes specially cooked by Chef Henri Freitag and his helpers. On their "flap-jacks" was poured generous helpings of the sweet drawn from the tapped maples. Only in Eastern Canada and northeastern United States out of all the world is maple sugar made in any quantity for marketing.

To the life insurance people gathered from 37 states it was explained by a Vermont speaker that it takes approximately thirty-five gallons of sap to make a single gallon of syrup and the Indian legend of the first discovery of maple sugar, was handed down by Rowland Robinson, an early Vermont writer, was recalled.

According to the legend an Indian, Woksis, set out for his first hunting and left in the wigwam his squaw, Moqua. She busied herself during the day with the preparation of their evening meal, putting some moose meat to boil in a kettle of water which she had scooped up from the base of a maple tree. She also busied herself with embroidering for him some moccasins and became so absorbed in this that the kettle boiled dry. When Woksis returned the moose meat was burned, but as he eagerly devoured it he found it extraordinarily sweet. Instead of upbraiding Moqua for her negligence he broadcast on all networks that Moqua had been visited by a heaven-sent messenger who had imparted to her the secret of the sweet sap of the maple tree.

Thus the Indian discovered maple sugar and the white man learned it from the redman. The insurance men entrained Saturday afternoon on a C.N.R. special after a three-day convention, charmed with their first visit to Jasper National Park—recollecting proudly that, although the Canadian Rockies were more majestic, they were geologically younger mountains than the modest green ones of Vermont.
