National Income

THE NATIONAL INCOME of Canada in 1946 was $9.2 billions, only half a billion less than the wartime peak of $9.7 billions, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Wages represented $5,112,000,000; military pay and allowances, $315,000,000; agricultural and individual enterprises, $2,090,000,000; investment income, $1,776,000,000.

The Bureau now gives what is called the gross national product. This adds to the national income figures taxes paid and depreciation allowances. In effect it adds up all the "inflow" items of the national account. This is a very important statistic for the provinces, for it is the governing factor in nity of nations comes first. For instance, the United States seems more willing to accept its position of world leadership. In Paris in 1919 President Wilson was the "great mediator." The world looked to him for guidance. Wilson had proposed the "Fourteen Points" to answer questions the Allied peoples had asked themselves as they fought. We ask those questions this time. Our answer is the "Atlantic Charter," with its Eight Points. It is startling to note the amazing similarity of the two. In 1919, it took the "Big Four" delegates five months to draft the Versailles Treaty which, on May 7, was delivered to the German delegates. It supposedly reduced Germany to the bare essentials, limited her military power, redistributed her colones, defined new boundaries over most of Europe, set reparations payments in money and materials, and established various international zones. The United States never signed that treaty, but made her own peace with Germany in July, 1921. On January 30, 1937, Adolf Hitler declared the Versailles Treaty "a scrap of paper," and on September 1, 1939, German tanks rumbled into Poland. Somehow, the world had made an unworkable peace in 1919. The world's problem today is to correct the errors of 1919 by writing a workable peace. That is the task confronting the current peace makers.

Sach of these fine "Tender Age" prepare tions is safe and dependable. Created odds to open up new territories and to make a living. Isolated by distance and meagre transportation, these families live in loneliness and in primitive conditions. When accident or sickness strikes, the nearest doctor may be more than 100 miles away:

In such remote regions, the Canadian Red Cross operates Outpost Hospitals and Nursing Stations. Many dramatic stories could be written of the mercy services rendered by these hospitals and by the valiant Red Cross Outpost Nurses. Space permits only the citing of a few figures.
