MACHINE POWER - The 800,000 cords of pulp wood, floated down Quebec Province's Maurice River in the annual log drive, are owned by several paper-making companies. Sorting out each company's timber is similar to cutting out cattle at a roundup. Each log bears the company's mark. In addition, each company saws its logs into certain lengths. Here, powerful jets of water push the logs toward a "sorting gap," where the varying lengths are diverted into (CP PHOTO) different channels where each company picks out its own.
