Defence Is In Favor Uncertain as to Where This Country's Special Force Will Go

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CP)—Canada's defence minister has come out in favor of the appointment of General Dwight D. Eisenhower as supreme commander of the Allied forces in Europe. Amid a growing belief that the general is slated to receive the post, Eisenhower has indicated that he is willing to take on the peacetime equivalent of the job he held during the Second World War.

Hon, Brooke Claxton, Canadian minister of defence, here to represent Canada at today's meeting of North Atlantic defence ministers, told a press conference that he knows of no WITH THE U.S. FIRST CORPS one better fitted than Eisen-IN NORTH KOREA (P)-Bodies hower for the job of commandof 30 Americans have been dising the combined force for the covered in and near a northdefnece of western Europe. bound train 30 miles northeast

Freedom of the Press

F ALL PEOPLE concerned with the freedom of the press, none has a more difficult task than the weekly newspaper editor, says a prizewinning editorial in a Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association contest. Much of it is also applicable to the smaller daily newspaper situation.

True, the editor lives in a democratic community (and the smaller the community the more democratic it is) but this complicates, it does not simplify, freedom of the press.

Under dictatorships, the editor can always consult the censor or the local party boss if he is in doubt on what should be printed. As there is no freedom of the press, he does not have to worry abut it.

In Army newspapers, the adjutant-general exercises its official censorship. Again there is no freedom, and the editor, generally a serviceman, has but to obey orders.

The editor of the big city newspaper, guarded by legal experts from fear of libel and by the publishers on policy, can print most of the news he receives and express opinions without fear of reproach. His circulation is large, the majority of his readers he does not know. His comments in the editorial columns are entirely impersonal as far as they are concerned. His authority is aloof and inviolate.

But your weekly newspaper editor knows most of his readers by sight, even if they are not his or his family's personal friends. The pressure on him to restrain freedom of the press, however unwittingly done, is constant. The pressure is increased by the fact that the editor often knows personally and sympathizes with somebody in trouble, whose case he has been asked "as a friend" not to report. If the editor deletes unpleasant references to other persons in the "Letters to Editor" column, the writer of the letter will ask him: "Where is the freedom of the press?"

The difficult part of it is that all these urgings are so natural. It is natural to wish to shield a relative or friend. It is natural for a person with what he considers a genuine grievance to wish to give vent to it publicly.

Whatever he does he will be praised by some and censured by others, not remotely but to his face by people with whom he comes into daily contact.

Personal relations thus complicate freedom of the press for the weekly editor, and often he will be tempted to abandon a principle for the sake of getting along with others. But he does so at the peril of the freedom he is sworn to uphold and at the peril of his newspaper's reputation for integrity.

He cannot do better than remember the words of the late C. P. Scott, for 57 years editor of the Manchester Guardian:

"Fundamentally, journalism implies honesty, cleanness, courage, fairness and a sense of duty to the reader and the community. The newspaper is of necessity something of a monopoly, and its first duty is to shun the temptations of a monopoly. Neither in what it gives, nor in what it does not give, nor in the mode of presentation, must the unclouded face of truth suffer wrong. Comment is free but facts are sacred. The voice of opponents, no less than that of friends, has a right to be heard. Comment is also justly subject to self-imposed restraint. It is well to be frank. It is even better to be fair."

Because most editors acknowledge these principles, a free press has rightly become a main bulwark of democracy. Those individuals who suffer or feel aggrieved because this freedom is maintained might well console themselves with the fact that the principle of freedom of the press is far more important ultimately to them and their descendants than any inconvenience or blow to self-pride they experience temporarily because of it.

The religious life oscillates between two poles life of service. Without the twofold emphasis which this oscillation involves there can be no deep, satisfying or satisfactory religion. The inner life of devotion may be called "the life in God" the outer life of service "the life for God?" And because God is both within us and without us-two truths called respectively by philosophers Divine Transcendence-the of God in the soul must also h the life for God in the world. To know God is to seek to do His will. To seek to do God's will is to come to know Him.

VANCOUVER (P) - Rescue on the high sees yesterday saved the three-man crew of the fish packer Elwee III after waves, whipped by a Pacific Northwest storm, punched a hole in the hull of the vessel.

The packer, stranded in the Strait of Georgia with water pouring into her engine room, broadcast a frantic "SOS," picked up by the fishboat London I which fought through a storm to take the ship in tow and hand her to a sheltered cove about seventy miles nort of Vancouver

COLOR CAN MAKE A ROOM SEEM LARGER

It's wonderful what can be done with the proper color combination. For instance, blues and blue green actually make the walls seem farther apart and the room larger. If rooms are inclined to be dark, naturally a There may or variations in light color of paint will make them brighter.

Some rooms can be brightened sufficiently by simply making one wall lighter than the others. Yellow in a room gives a feeling of sunlight twenty-four hours of the day. Pinks are warm and cheerful. Greens are restful and .37 relaxing, while blues are more formal and dignified.

The square in front with its fountains and impresrive lamp posts would hold 100,-000 people. The buildings of the Vatican surround the basilica. On the front of the building on the cornice are statues of Jesus

The Pantheon, Mr. Brooksbank said, was a church built before the Christian era. It is and the places where the pagan gods stood are still there, although the gods themselves have been removed. In the past, notable people were buried there, much the same as Westminster Abbey. He was amazed at the Coliseum, which would hold over 100,000 people. Modern stadia are small in comparison. From Naples the travellers journeyed to the Ise of Capri. There are many high class hotels on the island about the size of Kaien Island. It is noted as a resort and its climate is dry. Axel Munthe had a villa there and in it were rare objects dug up all over the world. The big attraction on the island, thought, is the Blue Groito, a huge cavern that must be entered by boat through a hole about four feet by five, from the sea. The roof of the half acre cavern varies in height from eight to 20 feet It is lighted through the hole through which it is entered by reflected light from the water. One can see fairly well in the blue twilight.
