Natural Law

"IC UPPLY and Demand" is just a natural law. Left to itself it will quickly establish prices on the basis of two well-determined factors—the amount of goods available, and the number of persons who want or can buy them. Capital is just as incapable of long obstructing the operation of this law, even if it so desired, as the individual is incapable of regulating the prices of the goods he wants. When there are more buyers than there are goods prices will increase. They will decrease when the opposite situation exists. That, in its simplest form, is the Law of Supply and Demand.

It is quite true that it is possible to induce shortages to artificially stimuate prices. But the result is as temporary as are the results of any other interference with the law. The suggestion of shortage spells opportunity to someone, and competition soon sets the law in motion again.

Government may step in and regulate both demand and prices. But it cannot change the law any more than can the capitalist. It can merely legislate that demand shall not be satisfied, and the usual result is to set demand operating in the ugly half-world of the black market.

It should be quite obvious that there is no permanent satisfaction to be assured by attempts to over-ride the natural law either by act of parliament or by group pressures. Let these arbitrary police forces slumber for one moment and the natural forces will again take control. The only way to assure that increases in wages will not be offset by simultaneous price increase is to work with the law. That is, to assure that for every wage increase sufficient additional goods shall be avail-Table to supply this extra margin of demand. With the supply of goods equal to the demand prices cannot increase. So wage gains become real wage gains.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

THE rather general belief that we have only to make demands to have the resources necessary a to meet those demands immediately available, is still apparent in the public attitude toward the obvious necessity of larger commitments for defence and possible participation in the present Children Spoonsmouldering war. The obvious fact is that we haven't got the money, and if we are to find it Fed, Class Told rigid economy somewhere must be prompt and effective. A recent issue of the London Economist stated:

.... If room is to be made in a fully stretched economy for several hundred million more of defence expenditure, then some other form of expenditure—governmental or private—will have to be reduced. This presents an awkward choice; but the one unforgivable thing would be to allow it to be decided by the blind lottery of inflation."

Flower Show Impressive

visit to the Horticultural Agricultural display held the Civic Centre in connection with the Civic Carnival poses one with the challenge: Do you appreciate or realize the variety and quality of flowers and vegetables that are grown in the city and the number of people who give of their time and ability to their cultivation? For a community that has so various parts many people with varied interests, a wholesome, beauty-conscious and progressive hobby is bound to be a happy one.

The first impression is the wealth of color. A closer inspection reveals the variety of entries and the quality of the exhibits, Massive dahlias, stalks of glorious gladioli, blooms of colorful, sweet-scented roses including the tiny Baby Princess flower, strongly colored nasturtiums, dainty violets and pansies, flashing marigolds, fragrant Gerry Dodd sweet peas and ever so many other varieties reward close in- Yamada, Mrs. F.
