Election Only Course

T IS QUITE EVIDENT that a general election, in I the hope that it will bring some kind of a decisive result, is the only thing now that will clear the political air in Britain and permit of the country's business being effectively carried on without a continuous consideration of political compromise.

With its tenuous margin, the Labor party, having the question of unity in its own ranks to consider as well as being under pressure of a critica! opposition, is virtually hamstrung even in carrying on the nation's normal business. It is all but ing of the Canadian Business impotent.

The desirable and the probable thing is that with vital business out of the way, the government will deem it advisable to dissolve Parliament and call an election, come what may as a result. The present stalemate situation can hardly be expected to go or much longer. Its undesirable effect is felt even beyond the realm of the country concerned directly.
