ISUP TO THE NATIONS to determine whether or not the atomic bomb is to continue more or less of a political football, or to agree that this menace to the peace of mankind shall, as a matter of world policy, become impotent.

There has been nothing like this before. It is a situation quite without precedent, and to effectively cope with it, every country on earth must have fullest confidence in each other. There can be no room for distrust or suspicion. Where its use, as an intrument of war gives an exclusive advantage, the latter can be so overwhelming that a struggle might well be hopeless. Latest developments, as they appear today, lead to nothing but conjecture, and the gradual growth of uneasiness. The movement toward defence is positive. Not since two cities of Japan were annihilated and people learned of the invention of an awesome terror, has there been more sharpened uncertainty than now.

Produce Concrete To Resist Frost

New Process Is Developed by University of Alberta Engineers

EDMONTON ()-Those heavedup highways and sidewalks that usually follow a cold winter may soon be a thing of the past.

Engineers at the University of Alberta say they have developed a process which halts the destructive effects of frost on concrete. The process involves injecting tiny air bubbles into the fluid concrete

It's done with soap or tallow. By adding a small quantity of! soap to the concrete during mixing, tiny bubbles, about the size of sand grains, are injected into the concrete. The process known as "air entrainment, and makes concrete about 20 times more durable against water, frost and alkali soils, engineers say.

The small bubbles make the concrete more cohesive and prevent "bleeding"-rising of water which weakens the upper surface of the concrete.

Development of the air entrainment method was carried on under the supervision of L. A Thorssen, professor of civil engineering at the university. Much of the research work was carried out by post-graduate students working on their master's de-

BUILT SPECIAL UNIT

To aid them in their work, they built an automatic freezing and thawing unit in which they tested the effects of cold on concrete. Believed the only one of its kind in Canada, the unit was built two years ago

In testing the new process, the engineers put slabs of concrete through rigorous tests, firs freezing the slabs, then heating them to 70 degrees centigrade They found ordinary concrete split up after about 25 of these freezing-heating cycles, while air-entrained concrete only partially disintegrated after 500 cycles.

The city of Edmonton, which backed the initial experiments, has started using air-entrained concrete in all curbing, sidewalks and street-paving. The new-style concrete also is being used by the Alberta public works department in bridge piers, and
