Save Our Hospital

THERE is cause for considerable anxiety in the history was surely the disclosure that our hospital is operating at a loss prophet Isaiah whose and, unless relief is found, will be forced to curtail great definition of libmits services.

Of all the services required in our community, the Bible, Isaiah 32 chapthose of our hospital are among the last we can afford to lose. Whereas attention to some personal needs can be postponed for lack of facilities, illness, injury and birth wait for no one. Unless they receive "thorough care, not only do the individuals concerned suffer but whole families are plunged into worry and fear, and eventually the community itself becomes affected by a sense of apprehension.

In an expanding district such as this, it is unthinkable that our hospital should function on a smaller scale. Our problems of health will grow greater, not less, and when account is taken of the efact that right now the number of patients in the hospital exceeds its estimated capacity, it is with the greatest concern that we contemplate the future.

In asking the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service | more and more classes of peofor an on-the-spot survey, the hospital board has acted wisely. Despite the discouraging outlook, it is not claiming that everything possible has been done and writing off the proposition as hopeless. Instead it is inviting expert outside opinion to determine if there is any way that further economies can be effected. If there is not, then we have a man-size problem as to who will make up the difference, but make it up someone must.

The board's action is prefaced by its somewhat modest observation that the hospital's operations are in line with the general provincial standard. As far as can be ascertained from other records, the truth seems to be that the hospital here is operating more economically than most. While varied local econditions preclude comparisons, the fact is that other B.C. hospitals of similar size employ larger staffs to attend fewer patients.

Comparisons, however, are of no particular importance. Our interest is here. Let others do as they wish, but there must be no reduction in services of the Prince Rupert General Hospital, and no citizen in the district should feel at ease until the danger is completely and finally eliminated.

cuse the U.S. of breaking the spirit of the pact, built to smash barriers and boost the flow of goods among member countries.

But a big part of the meeting likely will be taken up with a general discussion of the future of the agreement and whether it can function if countries continue to break trade promises.

What has nettled Canada and other exporting countries particularly are the steps taken by the U.S. to restrict imports of dairy products. Now there are proposals to place curbs against imports of Canadian oats and ground fish fillets.

Whe new U.S. dairy curbs went into effect July 1, the Canadian government, in a note of protest, made clear it did not consider the new restrictions any more in conformity with international trade pacts than the previous dairy curbs which had existed in the U.S. for the last two years.

On July 20 Canada lodged a new note with the American government, warning of possible "serious implications" if the U.S. imposes curbs against Canadian oats and ground fish fillets. Canada could retaliate against the U.S. by imposing barriers against American goods, but has decided against this course. It might just lead to more American restrictions and more international trade channel blocks, officials said. But they're not ready to throw in the sponge, and some hefty verbal punching can be expected in Geneva.

Saskatchewan CID Chief Retiring Soon

OTTAWA (CP) - RCMP Supt. W. H. Williams, who played a prominent part in the 1946 Russion spy investigation, will go on leave Aug. 1 pending his retirement from the post of chief of criminal investigation for division, Saskatchewan, it was announced today.

A native of England, Supt. Williams, 54, joined the RCMP in 1919 after serving in France with the Canadian expeditionary force in the First World

He was in charge of criminal investigation at Ottawa when the Russian code clerk, Igor Gouzenko, went to the justice department with the Russian embassy papers which showed the existence of a Communist spy ring in Canada. Gouzenko was under Supt. Williams' care for six months after he went to paused to check up on his the justice department. Another of Supt. Williams' assignments was that of security officer at the Chalk River, Ont. atomic research centre. He was moved there in 1942 to set up to hope that Mr. Champion had screening arrangements for the the ace and queen of clubs, so personnel and remained there he decided to end-play Mr. until the end of the Second World War.

Counting Often Saves Contracts From Defeat

Many contracts are made which could have been defeated if the defenders had taken the trouble to count the hand. And counting, in most cases, is such a simple process—as in today's deal. Against the four spade contract Mr. Muzzy led the 10 of diamonds and Mr. Masters won with his lone ace. He led a small spade to dummy's king ind returned a spade. When Mr. Champion showed out, discarding a small diamond, he went up with the ace

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - "These are my children, but they rule me. I've had to make over the house just to please " Edward G. Robinson gestured around his spacious Beverly Hills home. The walls were covered with paintings by the great names of modern art. These were his children.

Folks sometimes find it hard to picture Robinson as an art fancier, since he has specialized in playing mugs in the movies for 20 years. His latest adventure into film crime is to play a murderer in The Glass

Despite his career tendencies. he is one of the foremost private collectors of art in the world. The walls of every room in his house are adorned with rare and beautiful paintings.

"Do you even have them in the bathroom?" I asked. "Come and see." Sure enough, there were three sketches and

The actor conducted a tour of his home, pausing to marvel at a Renoir nude ("Isn't it alive?") or to pat the head of a Dega ballerina cast in metal ("She' quite a girl!"). Robinson exhibited a famous portrait by Van Gogh, a gorgeous scene of Tahitian horse riders on a pink beach by Gauguin and some posters by Toulouse-

Lautrec.

He then led the way to the gallery, which adjoins his house. Inside was a feast of art.

During the tour, the actor explained how he had started with his art collection: "I had always loved art as a kid. I would haunt the museums and galleries and read everything I could find on ert. Of course, I never dreamed that I would be able to buy some great paintings some day. "But along came the movies and made it all possible. I started with three paintings, a Monet, Degas and Pissaro. They were magnificent things, and it was well I started out with good lart. Then the dealers realize that you don't want anything second-rate." As time went on, Robinson kept plunking out his film salary for rare paintings, picking them up from dealers in New York and Europe. His specialty is French impressionism. Aside from pleasing his aesthetic sense, the venture has proved a good investment.

"It is true." he admitted, "the paintings have greatly appreciated in value since I bought them. If is now very difficult to pick up really great paintings. The museums have bought them up. There are few big private collections any more: they've run out of suckers like

With $1,000,000 or more of art work around the house, doesn't he worry?

"My only worry is fire. I don't worry about stealing. It's virtually impossible to steal paintings and sell them. Believe me. I've thought about it and given up the idea."
