Sea Cadet Lloyd Magnussen To Join South Sea Cruise

Leading Cadet Lloyd Magnussen, one of the most outstanding members of Prince Rupert's Captain Cook Sea Cadet Corps, will start off early next month on a big adventure, a cruise to Australia and other South Sea points. .

Cadet Magnussen, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Magnussen. 1345 Frederick Street, is one of 10 Royal Canadian sea cadets elected from 105 sea cadet corps throughout the country who will sail early next month on HMCS Ontario for a three-month cruise to Australia, New Zealand and the South Seas.

Cadet Magnussen, the only youth chosen from British Columbia, was recommended for the trip by officers of the local corps, on request of the Navy League. He was winner of the "best cadet" award here last year and has been in the corps since its inception two years ago.

The group will sail from Esquimalt on the 10,000-ton cruiser Ontario, returning to base in April

Prayer Not Outdated

EACE on earth-Good will towards men.

The singing of Christmas carols dates back to the 13th century. Since that time the hope has been repeatedly expressed in carol - "Peace on ==arth!"

With what success?

Unfortunately, as education, science and transnortation advance, those factors which contribute to unstable relations become more prevalent and hreaten "our peace."

However, we as a democratic, religious nation pray that those in control of our national and international affairs may be given the guidance and courage to effect peaceful settlements.

"Good will towards men"—this is the spirit of our religious teachings and it is directly controlled by us as individuals.

Most people express their sentiments at this season by prayer, the handclasp or toasts and thereby break any barrier or resentment which may exist. As individuals, we celebrate our good will at this festive season-let us face the coming year with a determination to exercise good will towards our neighbors, acquaintances, fellow workers and business associates.

The principles expressed in Christmas carols as far back as the 13th century have not been outdated with the passing of time.

"Peace on earth—Good will towards men."

George Was Hard

IT IS a terrible thing to see a big, strong man all broken up from a blow he never expected.

George was a strong man, and a hard man too. Of course you couldn't blame him. The old man had not exactly kicked George out of the poverty-stricken home, in those terrible years of the depression. Even as a boy George had a way of looking all the facts of life square in the face-his hard, calm brown eyes saw for themselves that he could not stay, so he went with hardly GEORGE never talked much of those depression days nor of his life in the army, But you did not need to hear him talk to know that they had tempered him into being the hard man that he was.

George did his job well, and as the years went by, made better and better money for doing it. Around the office nobody ever tried to borrow a dollar from George, much less a five or ten spot. For everybody knew, without asking, what the answer would have been. Nor did anyone ever know George to give a single, solitary cent to any charity drive. True, he would break down when they were taking up a collection to buy somebody in the office a wedding present. At such times, George would not be mean about it. He would simply say, in curt resigned syllables 'How much?"

GEORGE picked his bride with the same open-eyed calculating calm as he showed in every aspect of life.

You could be sure she was a good strong, healthy, intelligent girl when George married her for otherwise George-being the kind of man he was-would lever have given her a second

They lived in a neat little white house, drove a car, and went to the movies once a week. In their summer holidays they stayed home, for George said, why should they go chasing around the country when they already had a perfectly good house to live in.

WHEN George's child was born the office joke was "Ain't nature grand" or "Who would have believed it of that old chunk of granite?" George suddenly mellowed. He never missed an opportunity to tell something about "her."

One of the modern educational toys is a dummy steering wheel that allows the small son to "drive" the car alongside Daddy. As well as being a toy. it is also a kind of safety de-

My own son, a year old this month, has waged a long campaign to wrest the real wheel from my hands. He nearly succeeded once or twice. Had I believed in letting a child have his way at all costs to both parents would be lying in a heap of crumbled metal at the bottom of a cliff.

To give the child's dawning mechanical ability something to work on, I borrowed one of these dummy steering wheels and fixed it in the car. But the child was a better mechanic I thought. He found out right away how to take the steering wheel to pieces. Then he lost interes in it and reached for the rea steering wheel again.

Perhaps I should keep the dummy wheel until the boy is older, or else give it away to a ehild who is more easily fooled by imitations.

I feel anxious about the effects of the dummy wheel on a lad who does use it.

If the boy is an apt pupil, he will soon learn to copy Daddy's actions, as well as the words that Daddy says when a car passes him on a curve.

But attitudes developed in childhood often continue into adult life. The play driver will grow up to drive a real car, and inside him he will have the subconscious feeling that he need not worry how he drives, because someone else is really at the controls.

Already many drivers act as though they thought someone else was at the wheel. With children growing up under the such drivers may increase in numbers.

On the other hand, grown people might demand to have a wheel in their hands even when they were riding as passengers. Driving-school cars already have dual control. Later we may see triple-control and quadruple-control cars, and finally, a steering wheel for every passenger, so that the majority or the man with the strongest shoulder muscles would decide which way the car was going to turn.

Marlene Stewart Again Top Woman Athlete of Year

By JACK SULLIVAN

Associated Press Staff Writer TORONTO (CP)-By the margin of a good tee shot. Marlene Stewart, freckle-faced golfer from Fonthill, Ont., has been acclaimed Canada's outstanding female athlete of 1953. The country's sports editors and sportscasters left no doubt about that.

In an all but unanimous vote. they chose Miss Stewart for the third year in succession, enabling her to equal the threeyear record Barbara Ann Scott set up in the late '40s when she was winning world and Olympic figure-skating titles. Asked to name the three individual performers among the women in order of preference they hoisted "Little Ben" to the top with 232 points in the annual Canadian Press year-end sports poll. The votes were computed on a 3-2-1 basis and Marlene's total was nearly double the points received by the other 21 women mentioned by selec-

Champion Weightlifter Doug Hepburn Named Outstanding Athlete for 1953

By JACK SULLIVAN TORONTO (CP) - Doug Hepourn, 280-pound weightlifter from Vancouver and an unknown outside his native province a few months ago, is Canada's outstanding male athlete of 1953.
