There are a select few smart anglers who are taking advantage of the run of smelts now at Fairview, they are being well rewarded by very good light tackle sport and some of the best eating obtainable anywhere-

The flyrod folk use a small black gnat or similar, while common garden worms work for the hand-liner. Fish are visible and take bait within a dozen feet of the fisherman, a small spinner-fly or tiny finger-nail size piece of any fish bait kept slowly moving through the school will bring fast results.

A pretty good book by O. Rodman entitled "A Handbook of Salt-Water Fishing" is now at the Civic Centre library and offers considerable information for him who seeks it, not too much dope on our salmon or other northern fishes, but proper reading for most anglers, I feel sure.
