ELECTIONS

Now that the election campaigns are over, and after the excitement which is sure to be evidenced this evening, when the results of the polls begin to arrive, to a certain extent, interest in matters political begins to taper off, among the rank and file. At least, that is what happens usually. But it is questionable if the interest taken by what some people are fond of calling "the proletariat" in the political life of the country will fade away so readily on this occasion. There are so many matters of deep import, and which come home to every one in the community, demanding instant attention, that unless remedies are applied, and that speedily, something is likely to happen. For that reason, it is safe to say that the interest, which is getting wider year by year, taken in the actions of the elected of the people, will not so readily disappear on this occasion.

Were a greater interest, and a more intelligent interest taken in the affairs of the nation by the bulk of the people who have a vote, a great many of the anomalous things which are at present existing would not continue. The greater number of voters who make their interest felt in the actions of their representative, the better representation they are going to get. When a member knows that he is going to be criticised extensively throughout his riding, and when he knows that every voter is keeping tab upon him, then he is the more apt to remember the wishes of his electors.

Public interest in public questions is deepening with each succeeding generation. No longer is there a ruling class, as existed in other countries up to less than a hundred years ago. That which Sir Leicester Dedlock was afraid of has come to pass. "The floodgates of society are opened," yet without the disastrous results to the community, which he feared for his own class. Although the floodgates of society are opened, they are not yet extended to their fullest extent, although sufficient, possibly, unto the day. The people are said to elect their own representatives. It may be questioned often whether they do. For economic reasons often they are unable to elect the representatives they would like. Still, it is left with the people to elect or reject the candidates who stand for the honor that the people have to bestow. But at the best, this is an indirect manner in giving expression to the collective will of the people. There is great room for electoral reform.

Notwithstanding the war still going, and they are much nearer the seat of war and affected thereby than we in Canada, it looks very like as if there will be an election in Great Britain in the near future. Even with their National Government there, there is a party of kickers in the British House of Commons and Lloyd George is being dared to test the confidence of the nation by an appeal to the country. It is safe to say that the great little Welshman will retain the confidence reposed in him by the people there. And one thing that will be of considerable interest to Canadians is the kind of War Time Elections Act which his government will bring in.

Will Great Britain disenfranchise naturalized citizens as the Borden government did? Will Great Britain take away the vote from the women and give it only to the relatives of the soldiers overseas? We know not. Notwithstanding their vested interests over there, and their landed aristocracy, and the other relics from the feudal age, which survive and oftentimes clog the wheels of progress, the spirit of democracy is more evident there as each day passes. That mother of parliaments can still create precedents, even in that land where precedent is revered. And there are some parliamentary reforms and governmental reforms about due, which will still serve as a model for the younger nations of the Empire.

"Her Money Troubles"—They get more vexatious as the cost of foods climbs skyward. Meat, eggs and vegetables are almost beyond the family purse. Happy is the housewife who knows Shredded Wheat, its low cost and its high food value. A better balanced ration than meat or eggs and costs much less. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits with milk or cream make a complete, perfect meal, supplying all the nutriment needed for a half day's work at a cost of a few cents. Delicious for any meal with milk or cream, or with fresh or stewed fruits. Made in Canada.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

This is the day when great expectations will be realized.

This is the day when other great expectations will not be realized.

Following the lead of Australia and Canada, they are thinking of an election in Great Britain too.

No matter who is elected, whether Laurier or Borden, Canada is in the war to the end, with men, money and resources.

The new State of Siberia has put an embargo upon the export of foodstuffs into European Russia for fear they might find their way into Germany. Korniloff controls the greater part of the food producing part of Russia. The Bolsheviks in Petrograd will be up against it soon.

Russia wants to exchange German civilian prisoners for some four thousand Russian officers, prisoners in Germany. But these German civilians are mostly in captivity in Siberia, which has declared its independence of Russia. The Bolsheviks may have some difficulty in handing them over.

To get rid of the Portuguese Borden-Government required another revolution. The government troops were defeated after forty-eight hours' fighting. If such methods were approved in Canada, there would have been forty-eight hours' fighting long ago.
