BERNARD SHAW ON THE MOVIES

Objects to Educational Films But Wants Them to be Interesting

LONDON, Dec. 16.—G. B. Shaw spoke on films at a private exhibition at the London Pavilion of six of the new Secrets of Nature productions, natural history films made by British Instructional Films, Limited.

Mr. Shaw said that personally he was very fond of the "movies." In fact, he was a "movie fan," but he had to admit that the programs very often were not to his liking. The whole business of entertaining the public in this way was in the hands of the gentlemen who were called exhibitors. It was their duty to select the films—except when they were selected for them by someone else. Men who discharged such a function ought to be men of business, men of the world, and men of sense. Unfortunately they were nothing of the kind. The pictures were a peculiar thing. They seemed to attract a particular kind of man, not a business man, not a man of the world, but a man of the other world, who was an incurably romantic person. So romantic were they, indeed, that they believed that the public was entirely occupied either with wild adventure or with something that was described as "sex appeal." They must have "sex appeal," and yet it was his experience that the whole history of the "movies" showed that "sex appeal" was a thing that could be neglected almost altogether. If they would take the two most popular of all film "stars," Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford, they would find that in their films there was hardly any "sex appeal" at all.

Not to be bored, the audience must be given variety, and what variety did they now get from adventure and "sex appeal"? There was the Gazette, the film newspaper, which was very often very dull indeed, but, nevertheless, very popular. The attraction there was not only that of the news. Part of the attraction was seeing something that really did happen as a relief from the wonderful films about things that never had happened, never could happen, and never would happen.

It would not do to call natural history films "educational" or "instructional." That would be deadly and would at once choke off, not only the exhibitors, but the whole world. Nothing would induce him to see an educational film, but he did want to see an interesting film. Except in the case where one big film comprised the whole program, the ordinary entertainment would prove more attractive if there were something in it that appealed to the strong love of nature that existed in the Englishman. It took all sorts of people to make a world, but exhibitors imagined that the whole public were exactly as romantic as they were. They had to remember that films of interest would form a good contrast to their sentimental productions. For all these reasons he called on the film exhibitor to repent.

MOTOR CARS TO CARRY HAREM

Arabian King Has 24 Wives and Will Take Them all on His Journeys

NO WINDOWS IN VEHICLES

Light Admitted From Top of Autos Gives Light to Travelling Spouses

LONDON, Dec. 16.—(Canadian Press)—Ibn-Faud, King of the Hedjar, and his 24 wives no longer will travel by camel on their far journeyings across the desert domain of Ibn-Saud. The King has equipped himself and his harem with a fleet of eight high powered motor cars built especially for him at Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, under the direction of Stuart Marr, who has served in Arabia and knows exactly what the King wants. The complete equipment of motor cars is costing King Ibn-Saud $55,000.

The Arabian King has provided two motor caravans so that he may take his complete harem with him wherever he goes. His wives and their attendants will be locked in these totally-enclosed vehicles, barred from the sight of men. Sitting six a side upon a pile carpet, they will traverse the desert at over 50 miles an hour. There are no windows, light being admitted through opaque glass in the roof, and the women will be kept cool by electric fans.

SPEED OF 70 MILES

King Ibn-Saud will travel in front in one of his four touring cars, capable of 70 miles an hour. With him will be his suite, followed by two 24 seater open cars of the charabanc type, containing his body guard of 50 warriors, armed to the teeth.

Stuart Marr in an interview with the Daily News said: "I have been out there and know exactly what the King wants. Previously he undertook these long journeys by camel, travelling only 20 or 30 miles during the cool hours of the night and camping by day, and, in addition, can take his whole harem with him. This is a triumph for British car engineering. Italy tried hard to get the order, and one French estimate was turned down. This is the first time Ibn-Saud has had a complete fleet of cars specially made."

CARRY WATER TANKS

The vehicles are of 20.8 horse-power. Giant tires costing $375, a set have been fitted to take the load over the rough desert, and extra large water tanks and radiators have been installed, with gasoline tanks holding 60 gallons, as the fleet will sometimes have to travel 500 miles without refueling.

Ground clearance is nearly a foot, a miniature steel flagstaff carries the Royal pennant on each car, and grips are provided for white-robed outriders to cling to when passing through crowded cities. The drivers will be Mohammedan Indians.
