chose him as its senator.

Lost Four Sons

The war years took heavy toll of the Doumer family. Three of his five sons were killed in battle and a fourth died soon after the armistice from wounds. The stricken father was busy through the war with minor government posts, although he held a ministry without portfolio in the Painleve cabinet of 1917, which was overthrown to make way for Clemenceau.

Doumer was in eclipse then until 1921, when Briand, as premier, made him minister of finance. He held the same office in another Briand government in 1925 and in 1927 was made president of the senate.

It was in large measure due to the energetic young minister's pushing for the adoption of the income tax, always abhorrent to the French, that the Bourgeois ministry was defeated in 1895.

Jules Meline, "the father French agriculture," succeeded Bourgeois and, atlhough Doumer was a bitter opponent, offered him the governor-generalship of Indo-China. In that way the new premier thought he would shelve a dangerous adversary.
