Crux of Situation

For Great Britain the crux of the whole Mediterranean situation was the protection of the Straits of Gibraltar, declared Capt. Thomas. So long as the British navy was intact and the Rock held fast, there would be the greatest difficulty for surface craft to get back and forth.

A soldier does not need a lawyer to make his will. He can do it himself and it does not have to be attested.

In the matter of taxes the provincial government does not collect income tax from the soldier but the federal government, which is charged with the duty of carrying on the war, gives no exemption. Major Brown said the soldiers did not object to paying but did not see why the navy and the air force should be exempt while the army had to pay. He fancied all should be treated alike.
