A GOOD RECIPE IS BETTER WITH "Lady Astor was simply magnificent. She worked endlessly long hours doing all she could for the people, comforting some whose relatives had been buried under debris, cheering up everyone, helping folks get food and clothing and planning programs to keep up their spirits."

When Lady Astor decided not to run for parliament again it was a joint decision, Lord Astor continued. After his war work, he said, he did not feel physically able to undergo the strain of another election contest and he did not feel it would be easy for his wife to stand for election without his active help, as in the past. She was tired, too.

"If you had it all to do over again, would you go into politics?" I asked Lady Astor. "Indeed I would."

"Would you ever return to Commons if you felt some cause justified it?" "Yes." she said, and then caught herself. "Oh, I don't know," she said, pointing to Lord Astor's back and putting a finger over her mouth. Then, in a whisper, "he doesn't think I
