NEW BLOOD NEEDED

COR THOSE who raise their hands in horror when the lifting of immigration bars is advocated, some revealing figures have been announced recently in the House of Commons at Ottawa. There are no less than 34 M.P.'s sitting in the House who are not native sons of the Dominion, and many more are first generation Canadians.

Not only in politics but in all other spheres of endeavor, have immigrants proved themselves as the raw material of good citizens. It is only the ignorant and uninformed who conjure up the spectre of increased unemployment when immigrants are permitted to enter the provinces.

Canada, with her vast geographical spaces and wealthy abundance of natural resources, most of it yet untouched in the great northern portions, can never hope to realize her inherent potentialities with a thin population of eleven and a half millions.

In the simplest terms of economic's supply and demand, more population means more demand, more goods and services to be supplied, and the wheels of industry must spin faster to answer this need.

Tiny U.K. has 48,000,000 and the United States, with an area much smaller than Canada's, has 130,000,-000. Had the U.S. never had big immigration waves she could never have developed her resources to the point where she is the most powerful country in the world today.

Energetic, ambitious immigrants can help Canada attain her proper place in the international scene and a long range policy towards achieving this goal is well advised.

A LOSS INDEED

AISS ELLEN A. MERCER, principal of Prince Rupert's largest public school these many years, has resigned and it with sincerity, if also with regret, that we write to commend and acknowledge the wonderful service this fine woman has given this city and its people and children during the period of twentysix years she has been with us. We know that the parents, who have esteemed her so generally and so highly, and the hundreds, if not thousands, of children, who affectionately respected her as they passed through her faithful care, will join us in the highest tribute we can Newspapermen get around a bit and they hear a lot of things and we can say for Miss Mercer that, in our long experience which has nigh equalled hers in length of time at least, we have yet to hear an unkind or a critical word. In fact, we would say that her record in that regard is quite unique. Nor was it because Miss Mercer lacks in the ability to control, discipline and guide. Time here in Prince Rupert has shown that she had all the attributes and requisites for the ideal practitioner of the pedagogic profession. With due regard to the many other fine teachers whom we have had, have or may have, we shall be a long time, we fear, in finding an equal or a peer of Miss Mercer. We shall all miss her but we are keen to wish her many days of happy retirement days which may well be still useful to others for, although the age of superannuation has come, Miss Mercer, we as all her old friends know, is still full of competence and capa-

GOOD PRESCRIPTION

THIS SEEMS TO BE a year of British newspaper jubilees and centenaries. The News Chroncile led off with its 100th birthday. Its first editor, Charles Dickens, was duly honored in all congratulations. Then the Daily Mail celebrated its 50th anniversary by re-issuing its first number as a souvenir. It was the first of the so-called popular papers to be published in Britain. Finally, the Manchester Guardian asked to be excused for noting that it was 125 years old on May 5. It has expressed the hope that the spirit of its founders has been preserved but has left judgment on this to others.

The founders stated some of their hopes in the following manner: "Whilst they will exercise the right of spirited and vigorous animadversion upon public questions, and boldly expose public delinquencies, they will sedulously avoid all tendency to private slander, and endeavour to prevent the best prerogatives and most important duties of the press from degenerating into calumny and abuse."

WHILE ROME BURNS—WOOD—While the pros and cons of the current coal strike are being ping ponged over conference tables, miners Charles Simmers, left, and Ward Hall sit down outside the Harmar mine and enjoy a day of fishing. At the mine moving pickets made sure that the pits were empty. These two, like 1,850 others in the district, are "setting it out", as the nation's coal supply, already inadequate, sinks even further below the danger

Army troops have turned back to the Poles several million acres of land once farmed to provide foodstuffs for the Russians, they still hold big slices of Polish territory.

The Socialist party newspaper Robotnik said the Red Army, in Lower Silesia alone, occupies 350,000 acres of farmlands, including 745 estates once owned by Polish aristocrats. In Lower Silesia, the Polish Army farms 129 estates approximating 50,000 acres. Another 229 estates, of about 26,000 acres, are in the "Repatriates and settlers who go into Lower Silesia are for the moment up in tht air," the newspaper said. "They are neither the owners nor the managers of the land, and their work naturally suffers as a result of this. This is a matter for the administration of the western territories, members of which often are chosen because of their party adherence, rather than for their competence."
